Hartwell Ate Girl's Flesh

By JOHN DODD

YELLOWKNIFE (CP) — An RCMP inspector testified Wednesday night that pilot Martin Hartwell, who thought he was dying from lack of food after 23 days in the Arctic wilderness, said he ate the flesh of nurse Judith Hill, who already was dead.

Inspector Stanley Venner of Edmonton told a coroner's inquest that he spoke with Hartwell after the pilot was rescued following a 32-day ordeal.

He said he asked the following question:

"Did you eat or consume the flesh of Judy Hill?"

The inspector said the 46-year-old pilot replied:

"Yes. Nobody else did. David did not, because I started eating flesh after David was dead."

He was referring to David Kootook, a 14-year-old Eskimo boy put on Hartwell's plane at Cambridge Bay along with nurse Hill and Neemee Nulliayok, believed to be in premature labor.

Miss Hill died shortly after the crash while Mrs. Nulliayok died five hours later. The boy survived for 23 days.

Inspector Venner also read a statement signed by Hartwell. The statement said Hartwell wanted to die along with the Eskimo boy.

"But after David was dead, the will to live was reawakened," the statement said.

"I crawled out of the tent, got my crutches and stumbled to the nearest tree where I expected there would be lichens. I was completely exhausted, with aching feet, trembling from exhaustion and pain.

"I chopped off the lower branches, tucked them under my arm and crawled on my knees back to the tent."

The statement said this short trip took Hartwell two hours.

"I recognized that I could not continue . . .

"I made soup of the lichens, no more than a spoonful.

"I knew that since I could not get enough lichens to live, I could not make it to the lake to get fish.

"I needed food to fill the gap," until his legs improved.

"From here on, I think it is clear to everyone what I did. I'm still trying to forget this

Budget Approved

Liberals Win Crucial Vote

OTTAWA (CP) — The Commons approved Finance Minister John Turner's budget of tax cuts and pension increases by a vote of 143 to 102 Wednesday, giving the minority Liberal government a crucial vote of confidence in its fiscal and economic policies.

The vote, which endorsed the budget in principle, passed with New Democrat and Social Credit members supporting the government at the conclusion of a six-day debate.

One Social Credit member, Henri Latulippe (Compton), joined 101 Conservatives in opposing the budget, which proposes, among other things, higher old-age pensions and veterans' allowances, personal income tax cuts, reduced tariffs on a variety of imports and removal of federal sales tax from a list of items.

Standings in the 264-seat House are: Liberal 109, Conservative 107, New Democrat 31, Social Credit 15 and Independents, two.

Roch LaSallee (Ind.—Joliette) joined the 104 Liberals, 28 New Democrats and 10 Social Crediters who voted for the budget. Eighteen MPs were absent.

Among those missing were Conservative leader Robert Stanfield, sick with a cold, and External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp, attending the Vietnam conference in Paris.

The Conservatives acknowledged "certain beneficial provisions" in the budget, brought down Feb. 19, but said it would not deal adequately with unemployment or inflation.

The Social Crediters were also critical of the document, but chose to support it on the final vote.

Both the Conservatives and Social Crediters made unsuccessful bids during the debate to topple the government on non-confidence motions, Social Credit last Friday and the Conservatives Monday.

During closing stages of the debate Wednesday, Claude Wagner (PC-St. Hyacinthe) accused the government of selling out Quebecers by bringing in a budget that would be a failure in social terms.

He said Prime Minister Trudeau and the federal cabinet have long prided themselves on the success of the Liberal party in Quebec, yet, "never have so many taken so long to do so little for those they represent."

He also attacked the "New Democratic paradox" for choosing to vote with the government. Referring to NDP leader David Lewis, he said, "David did not dare face up to the Liberal Goliath."

The government should be aware that the price of NDP support this week in Ottawa would be paid by Liberal candidates in the 74 Quebec federal ridings in the months to come.

Labor Minister John Munro speaker of the day, said Wagner was long on colorful rhetoric but short on specifics.

Canada Pledges $250,000 Distress Aid to Vietnam

OTTAWA (UPI) — The Canadian government will make a $250,000 cash contribution to help alleviate distress in South and North Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia, External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp announced Wednesday.

Funds will be transferred through the Canadian Red Cross Society to the International Red Cross in Geneva in response to the recent appeal to the international community for $12.5 million in emergency relief assistance, Sharp said in a statement.

Indians, Marshals Swap Shots

PINE RIDGE, S.D. (UPI) — Militant Indians holding 11 "very scared" hostages in the besieged hamlet of Wounded Knee traded gunfire with federal officers Wednesday and fired on automobiles and low-flying planes that dared within rifle or shotgun range.

● Town was scene of dreadful massacre of Indians. Page 9

Two armored personnel carriers were brought into the Pine Ridge reservation by the federal forces while authorities manoeuvred to obtain release of the hostages.

The hostages, all residents of Wounded Knee, were seized when between 200 and 300 members of the American Indian Movement (AIM) occupied a trading post and Catholic church in a coup Tuesday night.

John McArty, an FBI spokesman in Rapid City, 70 miles northwest of Pine Ridge, said no "meaningful meetings" with the militant had been held, but added: "Attemps are being made to reach agreement to have the hostages released."

Sen. James Abourezk, Democrat of South Dakota, said in Washington he had talked by telephone with AIM leader Russell Means at Wounded Knee and told him he was ready to negotiate with the militants if they released the hostages.

Abourezk said he also talked with one of the hostages, Mrs. Agnes Gildersleeve, 71, and "she tells me that all of the hostages are safe and unharmed but . . . they're all very scared."

The embattled Indians demanded that the senate foreign relations committee hold hearings on Indian treaties, that the senate make a "full-scale investigation" of government treatment of Indians and that Abourezk launch an inquiry into "all Sioux reservations in South Dakota."

They vowed they would stay put until they got answers from Washington but said no harm "by Indians" would come to the hostages.

Court Upholds Hanging

VANCOUVER (CP) — The B.C. Court of Appeals Wednesday dismissed the appeal of a man sentenced to be hanged April 10 for the murder of a jail guard.

The five judges dismissed the appeal against conviction for capital murder by Gary McNamara, 20, of Orillia, Ont., who killed jail guard John Starchuk, 55, during a jail break at Alexis Creek, in the B.C. Interior, last June 2.

McNamara was charged jointly with Russell Borkowski, 18, of Williams Lake, who was found guilty of manslaughter.

Oil Pipeline Hearings Set

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate interior committee will begin hearings March 9 on proposed trans-Alaska and trans-Canada oil pipeline legislation, it was learned Wednesday.

Alaska Senators Ted Stevens and Mike Gravel are sponsoring a bill to authorize construction of an 800-mile pipeline to carry oil from the north slope to the ice-free Alaska Gulf port of Valdez.

Sen. Walter Mondale (D — Minn.) has introduced a measure to permit the issuance of interior department permits for a rival pipeline which would move north slope oil through Canada to the north central United States.

Five Found Dead After Ship Blaze

DARTMOUTH, NS. (CP) — Five crew members died when fire broke out aboard the West German trawling factory ship Julius Pickenpack on marine slips here early Wednesday.

Police said the bodies of four crew members were pulled from the charred interior of the 1,564-ton vessel at mid-day. The body of a fifth man was recovered earlier.

Police had said during the morning they had recovered one body and were searching for only one other, but later reported that four bodies were found.

The ship carried a crew of Germans and Portuguese.

One crewman said in an interview he was awakened about 4:30 a.m. by someone shouting "fire!" He said he scrambled to the bridge and set off a general alarm.

"The fire was so strong," he said, "that it took only a minute for the flames to engulf the entire bow area after the alarm was set off."

The rest of the 52-man crew was evacuated in various stages of undress shortly after the fire broke out.

Many of them were carried piggyback across a deck and wharf made frigid by temperatures of about five below.

Police set up an aid station in the lobby of a nearby hotel and the Salvation Army brought clothes for the men, most of whom were Portuguese.

Police said the crew quarters and most of the men's belongings were destroyed in the blaze, cause of which had not been determined.

Turkish Press Now Censored

ANKARA (UPI) — Military officials have imposed the first press censorship in 103 years by ordering newspapers and news agencies to withhold two paragraphs from a speech condemning censorship.

Newsmen in Ankara and Istanbul said it was impossible to gain approval of their articles in time for publication so they have in effect begun censoring themselves.

Life Advocated For Traffickers

SANTA FE, N.M. (UPI) — The New Mexico state senate voted unanimously Wednesday for mandatory life imprisonment without possibility of parole or suspension for drug peddlers.

One senator called the legislation the "toughest of its kind in the United States." It now goes to the house for consideration.

Bandit Killed, Two Held

QUEBEC CITY (UPI) — Three hooded men armed with elephant guns shot it out with police Wednesday after attempting to hold up an army paymaster's office near the tourist-jammed Winter Carnival. One of the bandidts was killed and another seriously injured.

The third gunman surrendered to the scores of heavily armed officers. One military policeman was slightly injured and two cars damaged, police said.

PoWs Issue Solved: U.S.

PARIS (AP) — State Secretary William Rogers of the United States received unconditional assurances from North Vietnam on Wednesday that it will soon resume releases of American prisoners of war, a U.S. spokesman reported.

At the same time, American and North Vietnamese diplomats headed toward agreement on terms of a declaration to give international backing to the Vietnam peace accord.

In day of hectic backstage diplomacy here, there were also signs to suggest the Vietnamese communists sought and got promises from the Saigon government of greater security for communist peacekeeping delegates in South Vietnam.

The communist side had been expected to release a second group of more than 100 U.S. PoWs early this week in keeping with the Jan. 27 Paris agreement on Vietnam. In holding up the release, the communists claimed the other side was not abiding by the ceasefire and was not providing for the safety of the communist peacekeepers.

By North Vietnamese reckoning, 442 American PoWs remain to be released.

Although a pattern of compromise appeared to have emerged on the prisoner issue, Robert McCloskey, spokesman for the U.S. delegation, emphasized that Rogers had made no bargain with North Vietnam. Rogers was given the North Vietnamese assurances on prisoner releases during a 30-minute session with Foreign Minister Nguyen Duy Trinh, McCloskey said.

As the two were meeting, another conference was taking place — between the foreign ministers of the two rival South Vietnamese regimes, Tran Van Lam of Saigon and Mme. Nguyen Thi Binh of the Viet Cong's Provisional Revolutionary Government. McCloskey said he did not know what was discussed between them.

Chinese Snub B.C. Call

VANCOUVER (CP) — China has refused to send two acupuncturists to B.C. to act as consultants on setting up standards for acupuncture treatment, a B.C. government official said Wednesday.

The invitation was sent by Health Minister Dennis Cocke to Yao Kuang, Chinese ambassador to Canada. It asked China to send one or two doctors trained in acupuncture to work for several months at Vancouver General Hospital.

Clayton Perry, Cocke's executive assistant, said the Chinese refused because they are concerned that many North Americans have "fantastic expectations on acupuncture."

Foreman Wins Fantastic Prize

LONDON (AP) — James Wood, a 56-year-old building foreman, won more than $1.3 million on the soccer pool Wednesday — the biggest sum ever won by one man.

He immediately thought of his hobby, fishing.

"I shall buy my own private stretch of river, somewhere where there is plenty of salmon," he said as he arrived in London to receive his cheque.

The actual prize was £542,252 or $1,328,517. Wood filled up a row of entries costing a total of one pound or $2.40.

He got the fantastic prize to himself because he was the only one among millions of bettors who picked up eight games ending in draws in British soccer last Saturday.

Officials of the Pools firm — Littlewoods — couldn't believe at first that only one man had won. Usually a big prize is shared among several. The previous record for one man was £512,000 or $1,228,800.

On Bilingualism

By RICHARD JACKSON
Colonist Bureau

OTTAWA — Prime Minister Trudeau promises to make it difficult for some members of the opposition when the government brings a hard and clear-cut resolution on bilingualism before the Commons.

With his resolution, he said Wednesday in an interview taped with Montreal newspaperwoman Solange Chaput-Rolland, he will compel all members of Parliament — but especially those of the opposition — to take a firm, unequivocal stand on the issue.

In this way, he went on, he will make it impossible for some opposition members again to go before the electorate — presumably at the next election — to take "ambiguous" positions on bilingualism.

He accused these unidentified members of the opposition of having said they opposed only the "excesses," as they termed them, of bilingualism, and not the question of the two official languages itself.

But, he charged, it was bilingualism alone that they really opposed.

They would have to take a clear position — for or against bilingualism in such a way that there could be no room later to manoeuvre around it with qualifying "ifs" and "buts".

Then the prime minister made a second disclosure.

Among the reasons he had decided to remain as prime minister — and he specified only this one — had been to be in a position to pursue and clarify the bilingual issue.

This was the first word, at least from the prime minister himself, that he ever had any other intention than doing what he could to remain in power.

In the throne speech, the government spoke of a resolution on bilingualism, together with guidelines, that would be coming before the House this session.

But the throne speech gave no hint that it would be such a "hard" resolution, compelling all MPs to stand up and be counted in such a way as to preclude any future running for cover behind qualifications.

Hartwell Admitted to RCMP He Ate Girl's Flesh and will probably never succeed.

"I won't go through the emotional strain again."

The inspector's statement was read to a packed courtroom after Chief Justice William Morrow of the Northwest Territories Supreme Court denied an application for a writ seeking to block the reading of this part of the testimony.

There was silence in the inquest room after the inspector concluded the statement.

The first 22 pages of Hartwell's 24-page, hand-written statement had been read to the court before the adjournment for the hearing on the application for a writ to block hearing of the final two pages.

Complete reading was interrupted by J. C. Cavanaugh of Edmonton, lawyer for Hartwell, who said the final pages were not pertinent to the inquest.

Edmonton lawyer Philip Ketchum, representing the estate of Miss Hill, had also appealed to block reading of the final pages of the statement.

The pages of the statement read earlier told how food ran out after 21 days. The Eskimo boy died two days later.

The statement, as read to the inquest before adjournment, described how the pilot and the Eskimo boy had talked about eating the bodies of the dead passengers. "No," the statement quoted the boy as saying.

Edmonton lawyer Philip Ketchum, representing the estate of nurse Judith Hill, one of the crash victims, had also appealed to block reading of the last two pages of the statement.

The section of the statement read into testimony told how Hartwell and a 14-year-old Eskimo boy struggled for 23 days to survive after the two other plane occupants had died. Then the boy, David Kootook, died, leaving only Mr. Hartwell to be rescued nine days later.

Miss Hill was killed in the crash and a pregnant Eskimo woman died a few hours later.

The statement by Hartwell said food ran out after 21 days.

It described how the Eskimo boy helped Hartwell survive before David, being flown to Yellowknife for an emergency - appendectomy, died.

The statement said Hartwell and the boy had talked earlier n their ordeal about eating the bodies and the boy had told the pilot he "would not want to eat his aunt."

One of the victims, Neemee Nulliayok, who was in premature labor and being taken to hospital in Yellowknife, was David's aunt.

Inspector Vennor said Hartwell handed him a 24-page handwritten statement which described in detail the events leading to the plane crash and the events afterwards until the pilot's rescue.

On the 20th day of the ordeal, the statement said, David started to get stomach cramps and "didn't want to get up." About the only thing they had left to eat was a one-inch long candle which they divided and chewed during the night.

When put aboard the mercy flight Nov. 8 at Cambridge Bay, N.W.T., David had been diagnosed as suffering from acute appendicities.

The nurse in charge of the patients, Judith Hill, 27, of Spence Bay, N.W.T., and originally from Kingsbridge, England, died just after the twin-engined Beechcraft 18 crashed into a wooded hill south of Great Bear Lake, about 180 miles off course.

After the crash Mrs. Nulliayok was able to stand up and walk away from the wreckage, the statement said. But she rapidly became weaker, started to moan and died about five hours after the crash.

On the 20th day of their ordeal, the statement said, the boy became weaker, turned to Hartwell and said: "Shut up. I am going to die now."

The next day, the two consumed the drugs in the nurses' emergency kit. The statement quoted Hartwell as saying he thought the drugs might kill him "in combination with other things that were wrong."

Then they had nothing to eat except snow and David had more stomach cramps.

Twenty-three days after the crash, David died.

"I figured it was just after midnight when I heard short breaths. David later stopped breathing and had no pulse."

Hartwell said he had been under the same sleeping bag as the boy in their makeshift leanto near the plane wreckage.

"I uncovered him, since I did not want to lie with a dead body."

Hartwell's statement said he lost consciousness for about five minutes when the plane crashed. He regained consciousness to find Miss Hill lying with part of her body outside the fuselage and her legs across his body.

The pilot noticed the boy and the Eskimo woman trying to get out of the cockpit. They were able to stand, but Hartwell found he was unable to follow them because both his legs were broken.

He said David helped his aunt out of the plane and he was able to pull himself after them, worried now that the plane might catch fire. David pulled the nurse away from the plane.

"I had noticed before the nurse's breathing had stopped and David said, 'I guess she is dead.'"

Hartwell's statement said they put a tarpaulin and sleeping bags on the ground near the plane and tried to go to sleep.

"David's aunt moaned for two hours. Then she stopped moaning. David checked and said she was dead."

Hartwell said he was not alert for the first four days after the crash.

"It could have been due to a blow on the head which also broke my nose."

The morning after the crash, David found a portable rescue beacon in a snowbank outside the wrecked plane. The beacon had not started operating on impact as it is designed to do.

Later that day he said, David started a fire, found Hartwell's bag of sandwiches and built a lean-to by following the pilot's instructions.

Hartwell said the food in the plane's emergency ration box was designed to last one week for two people.

On the first morning, the statement said, David and the pilot each had a cup of coffee with two sugar cubes. In the afternoon they shared a can of corned beef.

"David had a bag of bubble gum which he chewed continuously for one week."

For most of the next week they had coffee and two sugar cubes each in the morning while their afternoon meal generally consisted of a can of corned beef or instant mashed potatoes and bullion cubes.

Hartwell said he got the emergency rescue beacon going and left it on. He found two spare batteries for the beacon, but these only lasted a total of 12 hours altogether.

During that week, David dragged a seat out of the plane and put it in front of the leanto. Hartwell sat on this seat to chop firewood brought to him by the boy.

On the fifth day, both felt better and both wrote letters to their parents.

On Nov. 12, four days after the crash, Hartwell said he asked the Eskimo boy if he would walk south to investigate the country.

"He had never seen a forest before. He was afraid."

Hartwell said he gave the boy four cans of corned beef, the nurse's sandwiches from the plane, two candles and half of the remaining sugar, tea bags and Oxo cubes.

The boy was supplied with a fishing net and fish hooks, all packed in a small suitcase, the statement said. He carried a compass, knife and axe.

The statement said Hartwell told the boy not to eat more than half a can of corned beef a day.

The boy returned 50 minutes later and "said he wouldn't make it far because of the deep snow and that he would prefer to stay" with Hartwell and die.

The pilot said 18 snares were set for rabbits "but we never got any."

"All he needed was cigarettes," Hartwell said.

"He said they gave him strength."

The cigarettes gave out on the sixth day.

Hartwell's account then skipped to the period between Nov. 16 and 20 — eight to 12 days after the crash. He said they supplemented their food supply with lactose from the nurses supply and made one can of corned beef last for two days.

During that period, he said, David agreed to make an attempt to reach a lake that was visible from the crash sit to go fishing.

"I thought the lake was about five miles away. I am told it was 12."

The boy took half the remaining food and left at about 10 a.m. He returned at about 1 p.m. saying he was scared and couldn't go, the statement said.

It added that the boy had eaten a whole can of corned beef on his trip.

Later, the boy asked Hartwell whether he would be paid for the fish he caught at the lake, the statement said. Hartwell said he would gladly pay the boy $5 a fish and if he returned with 20 fish he would get the whole $1000 in the pilot's pocket.

The pilot added he would pay the boy for the rest of the fish when they arrived in Yellowknife.

On Nov. 22 the statement said, the boy again set out for the lake, taking half the remaining food. He left in the morning and returned near midnight saying he had been running in circles and couldn't find the lake.

That night an aircraft flew over the crash site and they turned on the emergency beacon. But the plane did not respond.

The next day David again went off to look for the lake but returned without fish and appeared to be very excited.

"He said he had found half of a cariboo carcass that had been eaten by wolves. He had left his sleeping bag beside the carcass and had run back with the axe. He did not bring any food," the statement said.

Hartwell said he told the boy to go back and find the cariboo. The boy left and did not return for more than 48 hours.

When David returned he said he had made a fire and eaten lichens, but had left his suitcase behind. He had not found the caribou. He was very weak.

"David's return upset me," Hartwell was quoted as saying. "I tried to go to the lake myself on my knees, but got only 15 yards and had to return because the pain was unbearable."

On Nov. 28 — 20 days after the crash — David started to suffer stomach cramps and didn't want to get up.

Hartwell said that by Nov. 29 David was unable to change his position in the lean-to and also had to be taken outside to relieve himself. He died on the 23rd day.

"I noticed I was weak from even a little physical effort and thought that I would soon have stomach problems myself," Hartwell said.

He had "given up hope" for his own survival.

The police inspector stopped reading the statement at that point.

Lawyers later objected to his continuing. They did not want the last two pages read, saying that since all deaths now had been covered in the statement no further evidence was required from Hartwell.

A lawyer representing the CBC said the public has a right to hear the full statement.

'There Was No Way Out But To Eat Human Flesh'

EDMONTON (CP) — "There was no way out but to eat human flesh and this I did," pilot Martin Hartwell declared in a press conference here Wednesday night. The balance of his statement followed the RCMP report to the coroner's inquest at Yellowknife, where Hartwell must appear and testify.

Hartwell was accompanied by Susan Haley, who has described herself as his girl friend. His wheelchair was pushed by her father who was instrumental in re-opening the search that rescued Hartwell.

Imitation.

(they say it's the sincerest form of flattery)

We pioneered the all solid-state idea (when others were using tubes.) We pioneered the printed-circuit module (when others were wiring by hand.) And two years ago we introduced the first "One-button", 5-function, color tuner (when other sets still boasted four or five controls.)

We call it the Quasar System—and there's no mistaking it. Here's what to look for.

1. Solid-state "Mini-Circuits". The incredible thing about them is that they are constantly being improved, made simpler. And each new version fits previous sets.

These solid-state modules do most of the work in a Quasar Color TV. They snap-in, snap-out, can be replaced in minutes—and are inexpensive. And when you eventually replace one, it will be with the newest version of itself. (Instead of buying a whole new TV, you simply replace "Mini-Circuits".)

Motorola has pioneered this retro-fit concept. The combination of solid-state reliability with the anticipation of future technology is the heart of the Quasar System.

2. Insta-Matic Color Tuning. One button tunes all five picture controls: color hue, intensity, brightness, contrast and even the automatic fine tuning. So you don't have to be fiddling half the night. Again, Motorola has pioneered it. And it even has a sixth-sense to keep the colors beautiful when you change channels.

3. The Warranty. Fixed right to the back of your set with a phone number to call if you ever need help. No fine print. No passing the buck. Only Quasar Color TV has it.

4. The Works in a Drawer. It pulls out, so a service technician can usually check out a problem right in your home.

When that happens your set doesn't have to go into the repair shop for a week or two. And you save a lot of money and a lot of aggravation. So don't be fooled. Insist on seeing Quasar Color TV.

What does the Quasar System all add up to? A set that will give you a beautiful picture, that you can depend on, for years to come.

Have a look at the Original.

How will you know you're buying the right set?

The set will have the Works in a Drawer. (It's the only one with the works in a Drawer).

Vietnam Peace Proposal

Sharp Prepared To Compromise

PARIS (CP) — A spokesman for the Canadian delegation at the Paris peace conference has acknowledged that the Canadian proposal for effective machinery against renewal of the Vietnam war has little hope of being accepted.

However, he indicated Wednesday that External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp is not adopting an inflexible position and that the Canadian demand is open to negotiation.

It thus appeared that Sharp, who during the day talked with the foreign ministers of China and South Vietnam, is preparing the ground for Canadian acceptance of something less than what his government originally considered essential as the basis for retaining Canadian observer troops in Vietnam.

Publicly, Sharp insists that the 13-party conference establish itself as a continuing political authority with reports of peace violations channelled to them through UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim.

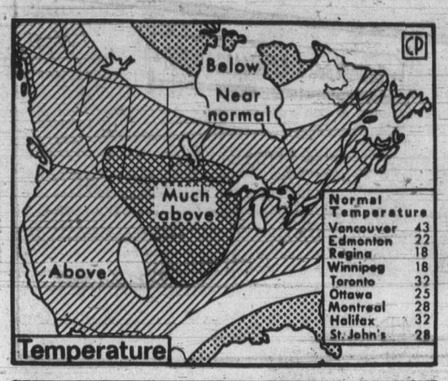
Informants said Sharp, in meeting with the Chinese foreign minister for three hours, tried to explain Canada doesn't want the entire UN involved in Vietnam, only the secretary-general. The communist groups have made clear they want no UN involvement in Vietnam and remain cool to any outside involvement.

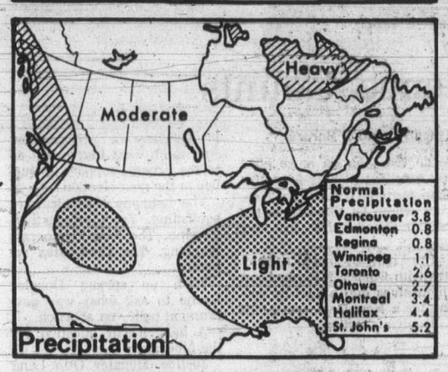
The Canadian spokesman maintained Canada is not bluffing in its threat to withdraw the Canadian observer troops by April 30 unless the conference comes up with some form of acceptable formula to ensure action on reports of peace violations.

He said Sharp will not sign any joint declaration if it proves "patently unacceptable." There have been reports that the draft joint declaration is being worked out by the United States and North Vietnam.

Earlier, Sharp told a reporter "it would be very naive to think that our proposal as such has a chance."

The impression gathered by observers is that Canada has adopted a tough bargaining position in the hope that some of it would rub off on the final declaration which might at least lean toward the Canadian demand.





Warm and Wet

Precipitation is expected to be heavy with above-normal temperatures throughout B.C. this month, according to 30-day outlook of U.S. Weather Bureau. This is not specific forecast and changes may occur.

They Ventured Forth, Reluctant, Doubtful

By RAY DICK

TRI TON, South Vietnam (CP) — The Polish colonel pointed at the jagged hole in the tin roof, then down to the small crater in the concrete balcony.

They didn't line up, and no amount of explanation seemed to convince him that the same shell, or even if it was a shell, made the two holes.

The Hungarian delegate was also doubtful, despite fresh pieces of steel lying around, a mortar shell fuse and a tree peppered with shrapnel.

The two, along with Canadians and Indonesians, were on their first field investigation trip for the International Commission for Control and Supervision (ICCS).

It was obvious there was some dissension in the ranks of the ICCS team.

In fact, the Hungarian and Polish delegates didn't decide to come until the helicopters were warming up for takeoff at the ICCS regional headquarters in Can Tho.

The trip was accomplished at the insistence of the Canadians and Indonesians, who were determined to conduct the investigation despite inferences of "rash decisions" by other members of the ICCS.

The complaint by the South Vietnamese and the Americans was received by ICCS regional headquarters in Can Tho Saturday.

"The Canadians and the Indonesians agreed to go immediately," said Manfred Von Nostitz, head of the ICCS Canadian delegation in the Can Tho region.

"The Polish and Hungarian representatives said they were ready to go on the investigation," he said, but they couldn't act until the Joint Military Commission could guarantee their security in the region.

Canada and Indonesia decided to proceed, and it was then, one Canadian source said, that they were accused of making rash decisions.

At the last minute the Polish and Hungarian representatives showed up at the helicopter pad and said "as a gesture of good will" they would go.

"I think we shamed them into going," said an Indonesian spokesman.

Von Nostitz said he had been in contact with the Viet Cong representatives on the JMC and that they assured him "the ICCS team would not have to fear their security as far as the Viet Cong was concerned."

The complaint was about mortar shelling in this small district town in the Mekong Delta, about 10 miles from the Cambodian border, which killed several Vietnamese civilians and damaged the building which the ICCS sub-regional team is scheduled to move into shortly.

It was at the future ICCS building, the first stop for the investigation team, that the Hungarian and Polish delegates seemed unconvinced.

Measuring tapes were produced, angles of fire were measured, pieces of shrapnel were dug from trees and the buildings while American and South Vietnamese officers attempted to explain what had happened.

The mortar fire came in from the surrounding mountains, they said, injuring two civilian workmen who were attempting to get the building in shape for the arrival of the ICCS sub-regional team in a few days.

An American colonel explained that a delayed action fuse didn't go off when it hit the tin roof. When it exploded after burying itself in the concrete patio, it blew the roof plates out of position. The holes, therefore, didn't line up.

The Polish and Hungarian members seemed unconvinced.

From there the team was taken to the district headquarters where a roof had been blown off one of the buildings, a house which the South Vietnamese said was destroyed by a shell and a schoolhouse were two teachers and six children were killed.

At the schoolhouse, the South Vietnamese officers explained, a mortar shell exploded on a flat rock in the grounds, spewing shrapnel in all directions.

At each stop the ICCS team was confronted with the widows and orphans of the victims crying and wearing headbands of mourning.

A report on the investigation will be made and filed with the ICCS and JMC headquarters in Saigon.

"One thing seems sure," said one Canadian officer. "The report will not be unanmimous."

Protests May Be Out

TORONTO (CP) — Sit-ins and disruptive protests may be outlawed at the University of Toronto if a proposed new code of behavior for staff and students is approved, Paul Caderio, a student on the university's governing council, said Wednesday.

The code, to be considered by the council March 15, would prohibit "intentional or reckless obstruction or disruption or undue disturbances, by any means — of teaching, research, administration, disciplinary proceedings or any other authorized activity on the university premises . . ."

Caderio said the code would also ensure the right to "privacy in offices, laboratories and residence rooms" and the right to "pursue normal academic and administrative activities, including freedom of movement."

Penalties for breach of the code would be fines, expulsion or termination of employment.

David Spring, 33, fired as a mathematics teacher, was visiting friends in West Africa when he heard of the student campaign to reinstate him and returned.

Tuesday he was at the hall, along with Michael Mather, 31, and Stephen Salaff, 35, when about 300 students rallied to their support with a sit-in.

Student spokesmen said all three are "extremely capable teachers" and demanded they be rehired and that students have a voice in hiring and firing policies in the mathematics department.

Spring said he had been told by department chairman George Duff he had not published enough papers in his field.

Controls Commitment

SO WHAT ELSE IS NEW? An independent economic study of Canada tells us we've got troubles with unemployment and inflation. Those are the "soft spots" in Canada's economy, says the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development.

OECD is a grouping of European nations, Canada, the United States and Japan, which makes an annual analysis of its members. Its latest Canadian "look-see" was optimistic about the performance of the economy, noting that it was strong in 1972 and should continue to be so during the current year.

But there are these high rates of unemployment and inflation for which the OECD doesn't see any immediate improvement.

Reducing the 6.3 average 1972 unemployment rate percentage to a desired 3 or 4 per cent "would seem to be realistic only in a situation where existing regional differences have been substantially reduced, a process likely to require time," the study report states.

And on inflation, running close to 7 per cent as compared to 4 in the United States (Prime Minister Trudeau has repeatedly said we could live with 6 per cent) the OECD had this to say, in effect:

Expansionary policies, such as the personal income tax reductions and higher pensions for veterans and the elderly contained in the new federal budget brought down after the study was made, may have to be curtailed somewhat.

What the OECD seems to be suggesting is that Canada, while on the right track, may be showing too much vigor in some directions but not enough in others.

Perhaps of greatest significance is reference in the report to controls on prices and wages which remain "a possible approach to alleviating the unemployment and inflation dilemma."

Now we're getting somewhere. The question of mandatory controls has been discussed by Canada's political parties over the last two years with statements coming from both the Liberals and Progressive Conservatives that they might be introduced as a last resort. The contention of many Canadians is that the time for "last resort" action has long since passed and, perhaps, had one of the two major parties made controls a plank in its last election platform, the country today would have a majority government.

Opposition Leader Robert Stanfield appears to have come to this conclusion, finally. In a statement he is reported to have made in the House of Commons during debate on the federal budget last week, he said the government should have used the budget "to signal the end to a long period of economic confusion and stagnation" by introducing, as he would have done, immediate wage and price controls.

The OECD, as an outside body, could hardly be expected to dictate policy of this kind for Canada, and chose its careful "possible approach" reference to controls. But one of those in a position "on the inside" to do so has uttered the words that have long been awaited by many who see them as the only way out of Canada's unemployment-inflation wilderness.

United Nations in Vietnam

SUCH IS THE CONFUSION of the Vietnam "cease-fire" that it is diffcult, at this point, to see Canada making any great headway in its spearheading move for United Nations involvement. At the time of writing External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp is meeting privately with delegates to the Paris peace conference to press the case, and it can only be hoped that he is not arguing a lost cause.

The question is, how stiff is the Communist opposition to the proposal for establishment of a continuing political authority to which the International Commission for Control and Supervision can report?

It would appear to be considerable.

When the four-nation ICCS was set up, Canada's reluctance to accept membership was partly because reporting procedures for violations of the "cease-fire" were left in the air.

The old international control commissions in Indochina floundered because of the absence of an international secretariat to guide them. There was no place to send reports. Efforts to communicate with the signatories to the Geneva conference through Britain and the Soviet Union proved futile, and the co-chairmen could not act on control commission complaints without calling a conference.

Canada could see itself going through similar frustrations again. But there was a promise of "definite arrangements" being made on reporting procedures at the current conference in Paris.

So it is that Canada seeks utilization of the UN secretariat in the operation of the new commission, to which there were encouraging signs when the presence at the Paris talks of Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim, even without voting rights, was accepted by Hanoi.

Writing in The Christian Science Monitor before the conference opening, former Moscow correspondent Charlotte Saikowski said, "North Vietnam's apparent willingness to drop its previous hostility to the UN should be followed up. It would smooth the way if Hanoi were to be granted observer status in the world body — a status South Vietnam already holds."

It would appear that some indication of a move in this direction might well have been made. There seem to be second thoughts among the Communists, now that the Paris meeting is under way, on the UN being there. Mr. Waldheim is not being made welcome. He was barred from Wednesday's meeting of delegates trying to draft a conference agreement.

Perhaps it means little because, after all, he has no voice in decisions. But it might be taken as a message to Canada that its efforts are fruitless, in which case the threat to withdraw should be carried out.

Twenty Years After

Stalin Wears Different Masks

By DEV MURARKA from Moscow

Stalin is out of bounds till April. This is because the area where he lies has been cordoned off for renovations to Lenin's tomb. Nevertheless, a bunch of flowers will almost certainly appear under Stalin's bust on March 5, laid there by persons unknown to the public.

On that day the Russians will have been without Stalin for 20 years. Yet it cannot be said that the country has really learned to live easily with his memory. His name evokes a sort of schizophrenia. The legend for good and evil has become larger than life. Everyone knows it, but few discuss it.

Officially, the anniversary will pass unnoticed, but this is the custom here; only birth anniversaries of long dead leaders are marked. An additional factor in this silence over Stalin is the official desire to avoid any renewed controversy.

* * *

The official attitude, however, is itself full of ambiguities. While the Russian rulers can hardly praise Stalin in an unrestrained way, criticism of Stalin is considered bad form. Some limited praise is even encouraged, mostly of Stalin as a wartime leader. But in general the authorities prefer simply silence.

The result is that the ordinary people nurse their own private image of Stalin. Often enough it has little to do with the reality of the whole man. For instance, many remember the Stalin period with nostalgia because there was no inflation then, and prices of goods were reduced frequently. But this ignores the fact that there were not many goods to buy anyway.

A bigger source of admiration for Stalin is the strict order he maintained. The outside world may consider that the Soviet Union is far too disciplined and regulated by the state even today. But for countless ordinary Russians for whom the post-Stalin period was a bewildering experience, this is not enough. They would submit to even greater discipline and welcome more decisive rule at the top. This conservative revival buttresses the bureaucracy in its determination to resist change.

* * *

What the ordinary people, and the government and party apparatus, seem to desire, therefore, can be described as Stalinist firmness without Stalin's own excesses. It is a dispiriting trend to a foreign observer and is based on myths which have not been exploded. The authorities think that everything will be all right if the myth buries the reality even deeper. And so long as an explosion of reaction does not come within their lifetime it suits them.

The danger may be that the bigger the myth the bigger the reaction if and when it is exploded. The people in general do not believe that a return to Stalin-type terror is possible. They see as their ideal a strong government which keeps within the bonds of legality. Undoubtedly, the Soviet leaders have sensed this mood and this is evidenced by Leonid Brezhnev, the Communist Party boss, when, reviving the idea of a new constitution he went out of his way to indicate that it would be designed to strengthen law and order.

This is, however, only one side of the story. Other sentiments about Stalin are held by many, though not all, of the intelligentsia, and even by some ordinary people who had the misfortune to be directly affected by the Stalin terror. The intelligentsia has nothing but a dread and loathing for everything Stalin stood for. It considers Stalin as an embodiment of backwardness and the root of all the misery that has come its way. It would go to the other extreme of completely negating the record of Stalin, denying him praise. But with passing time it is becoming frustrated and cynical about this ever happening. For the most part, with a few notable exceptions among the active dissidents, the intelligentsia, however, has learned to remain silent about Stalin.

The intelligentsia and the masses look and deal with each other through a wall of distrust. For the time being it suits the bureaucracy to have the masses on their side in the matter of Stalinism. It inhibits the intelligentsia and takes the sting out of rebellion.

No one can say with any certainty what will happen when the myth of Stalin loses its utility to everybody, and memory of the man is so faint that it will cease to be a matter of practical concern. But for the present Stalin lives on in a cocoon of mystery, loved by some, hated by some, and indifferently remembered by most.

Ottawa Offbeat

Where Experience Counts

By RICHARD JACKSON, Colonist Ottawa Bureau

If the Liberals have anything over the Conservatives — in addition to that two-seat 109-107 edge in the House of Commons — it has to be experience and discipline.

There are few freshmen on the Liberal backbenches, none along their front line in the House.

So virtually all hands on the government team pretty well know the parliamentary score and how the plays are made.

On the Conservative side of the Commons there are almost as many freshmen as veterans.

They know little about Parliament, but don't know they don't.

The not-so-young freshmen on the Tory team, with experience in other fields to guide them, realize they have something to learn about Parliament.

* * *

They have the wisdom of patience going for them, and bide their time, seldom dashing headlong into the action, but watching, listening and learning. Making no waves they get into no trouble.

Not so with the younger gung-ho freshmen.

They jump in with both feet and frequently get beyond their depth.

What makes it all the more perilous for them is that Conservative Leader Robert Stanfield, running a rather free and open operation, allows them pretty free rein.

Across the aisle, Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau and his cabinet run a comparatively tight and closed political shop.

There's discipline. They may have their differences in the privacy of caucus and sometimes even out in the public glare, but when the pressure's on they stand and vote together. And when it counts they even seem to think together.

* * *

Take the case of Douglas Roche, first-term Tory out of Edmonton-Strathcona.

He came to Ottawa and talked of his fear of being swallowed by the big bureaucratic machine. Everything was too big and overpowering, the government, the civil service, the city itself, the lot.

He might have known better for he had been here before as a much younger man.

But now he had become a member of Parliament and immediately qualified in his own mind to make public pronouncements on what was wrong — he found little right — with the democratic process as it works in the House of Commons.

And horrors, he found there to be too much "confrontation," as he termed it, in Parliament.

Political confrontation, that is, of one party and its partisans trying to put down the other.

It was a discovery Douglas Roche made that rivalled that of former Conservative MP Robert Thompson of Red Deer who is remembered fondly for startling the House of Commons with the accusation that its honorable members were "turning it into a political arena."

The other day, he managed to do the Liberals more good in two astonishing minutes than former Grit MP Hu Harries, whom he defeated in the last election, did in four years.

The Liberals, loaded as they are with Quebec MPs, had got themselves into a bind by voting for a New Democratic bill to legalize abortion.

* * *

It was a first reading only of the bill and meant nothing. The Liberals were voting only that the bill — it could have been any bill — be introduced.

But the vote could — and definitely would — have been interpreted by the Creditistes in Quebec as pro-abortion. And think what that might do to the Liberal support in Quebec in the next election!

The unhappy Liberals were squirming. The Conservatives glowing. The New Democrats laughing. The Creditistes rejoicing.

Then up sprang Douglas Roche to ask what was government policy on abortion.

Justice Minister Otto Lang answered that the government never would bring in such a bill nor would they support one.

"What have I done?" asked Douglas Roche as angry Conservatives descended on him. They told him: bonehead play.

Our Very Own Seven Wonders

In view of Canada's acute unemployment, I suggest we put people to work building our own Seven Wonders of the World.

Like the building of a Roman Colosseum in Ottawa wherein irate taxpayers might do battle with the gladiators of government bureaucracy. Or a Taj Mahal on Parliament Hill, complete with double beds for the new Lab-Lib coalition.

We could employ a few thousand on a winter works program of turning the nation's jails into rest homes for weary mothers intent upon protecting their children from dangerous sexual offenders out on weekend passes. How about a People's Palace for Victoria to mark the occasion of the new socialist land grab of the provincial government? In a pinch we might even provide jobs by turning our churches into museums exhibiting all those odd virtues, standards, principles, ethics and ideals which helped built this nation.

Indeed, such Weirdo Wonders could well provide sufficient tourist dollars to repair some of the damage which has been done in the name of permissiveness, pragmatism and political power.

Remembered

The Volunteer Drivers' Bureau came into existence some five years ago in this city when a number of dedicated women saw the need to assist people who had doctors' appointments. As the need grew, so did the bureau, as many people of like mind, volunteered to do the driving. From that time until January of this year the bureau served the community with no cost to the taxpayers.

Eventually costs within the office rose to such an extent that they were compelled to ask the government for a grant. This was refused and the bureau had no recourse except to close January 31.

But what of the people who had depended on them over the years and had been helped so efficiently?

The drivers, of whom there were scores, from all walks of life, throughout the city and as far away as View Royal and Keating, had to be a very special kind of people; becoming involved in helping others and accepting no reward, except the opportunity of doing so.

I wish to extend my grateful thanks to each and everyone of these wonderful people for their help and kindness through the years.

Killing

So much has been said, pro and con, regarding capital punishment that I hesitate to add to the emotion-charged, Bible-backed opinions and prejudices, bigotry and bias that are almost a daily feature of our public communications.

I can only say that I do not believe in killing my fellow man, whether it's by hanging him, shooting him, running him down under my wheels, even stabbing my wife to death or stomping the life out of my children.

However, many, many people do believe in killing a human, whether in a spirit of revenge, justice, fear, hate or other passion. A recent letter in the Colonist from "Fair Play" highlighted a sorry truth about us humans when she said, "we accept" death by war and on the highways; so, we accept and in so doing the intrinsic beauty of our "human-ness" is further blemished and capital punishment will again be the law and we justify our desire to kill.

In truth, without rancor or anger,

E. FORAN HAGARTY,

Tax Cuts

I hate to quibble over small matters in this age of mighty problems and world crises, but, I am sure there must be others beside myself who wonder what motivated the federal government to remove the tax from soft drinks and candy bars.

We applaud the removal of taxes on fresh fruit and children's clothing, both necessities of life — or at least life would be less pleasant and healthful if we couldn't afford them for our children.

As soft drinks and candy have no food value, they properly belong with alchohol and cigarettes — luxuries. Unfortunately as soft drinks and chocolate bars are cheap (even with a tax) they are often substituted for food. It is no good, for example, telling a child a can of fruit juice is better than a can of pop. He knows he can get more pop for less money — besides pop is a treat drink. If you are on very low income with a number of children, you know it costs less and is less trouble to give your children candy cookies for lunch instead of meat or tuna sandwiches.

All of us, adults, and our children, consume some things that are bad for us. Life might be dull if we didn't. However, the proportion of junk we consume might not be anybody's business but our own were it not for such things as medicare and the projected denticare. We pay enough tax on alchohol and cigarettes to more than compensate the nation for expenses we might incur should we become an alcoholic or come down with lung cancer or emphysema. With a good tax on candy bars and soft drinks we might be able to put a subsidy on milk.

True the federal government has little to do with direct health care, so perhaps it was responding to a plea for financial help from soft drink and candy companies which, they hope, will employ more people. Frankly I don't think it is possible for us to eat more junk — the maximum has been reached.

Leftist

By their deeds ye shall know them.

I observe the CBC is always supported by the pinkos, leftists and socialists, etc., and have seen many documentaries very much slanted to the leftist viewpoint.

If this is what the people of Canada want there can be no complaint, but in view of the history of hundreds of years of the failure of socialist ideas, I do not see how any one well informed on the subject could possibly want this disease in Canada.

England and Sweden are modern examples of the failure of socialism. Surely we don't want to repeat this insanity in Canada.

Tenth of a Series

Newsday senior editor ROBERT W. GREENE and reporters LES PAYNE and KNUT ROYCE spent three months in France last fall as part of a nine-month investigation into the business of heroin. They were joined there by two other newsday reporters, CHRISTOPHER COOK and PUCCI MEYER. This is another in the series, The Heroin Trail.

By a NEWSDAY Reporting Team

Two months ago an attorney for the French magazine Historia appeared in court to fight a motion by a man named Marcel Francisci to seize all copies of the publication. Historia had called Francisci a racketeer.

Later that day the attorney received a phone call from Jean Bozzi, secretary of the national assembly and a leader of France's ruling Gaullist political party, Union pour La Defense de la Republique (UDR). Bozzi told the attorney, Jacques Mercier, that Francisci was his friend. He also told him, "You said all those things about my friend . . . I swear they are all lies."

Marcel Paul Francisci, a 53-year-old Corsican with extensive legitimate business fronts, is considered one of the most important men behind the heroin rackets in France. An excerpt from a report on him by the French national police: "Very important member of an international association of drug traffickers operating, on the one hand, between the Near East and France, which deals in morphine base; on the other hand between France and North America, for heroin."

Over the past 20 years, France has emerged as the world's heroin headquarters, after Italy cracked down in the late 1950s on its heroin labs in Milan, Genoa and other cities.

While it was not until 1971 that the U.S. Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous drugs (BNDD) announced, in statistical form, how much of the heroin bound for the U.S. came from Marseilles — 80 per cent — U.S. federal agents have contended over the past two decades that the bulk was coming from France and that the networks were controlled by Corsicans.

This preminence has been achieved and maintained, at least in part, because of the failure of the French government to vigorously attack the leading profiteers — and this failure can be traced to favors that the traffickers once did for the Gaullist party.

These government officials allowed the underworld to build organizations, supply sources, laboratories, courier systems and a viable market — creating a series of heroin syndicates that function with a sophistication unique in French criminal history — with little or no interference from the French government.

In August, 1971, John Cusack, then European chief of the BNDD, was interviewed by a reporter from the Marseilles paper, Le Meridional.

The story said Cusack compared some of France's top heroin mobsters to Al Capone. It quoted him as saying that "thanks to their bank balances, special connections and considerations shown them," these men are untouchable.

Cusack was recalled to the U.S. on the demand of the French government. Official French reaction came from The discovery was pure accident. The operation had been geared uniquely to the local market: dismantling it had no impact on North American consumption.

In a Paris restaurant, we chatted with a source close to the French political scene. Occasionally, we referred to a mutual friend with police connections.

As our companion rose to leave, he said, "Our friend wants you to have the envelope that I'm leaving on the chair here." There was a flurry of handshakes and he departed.

We opened the envelope in a taxicab later. It contained photocopies of secret French police files on Marcel Paul Francisci.

Items from the confidential police file: (The following information is extracted from a confidential interview of Marcel Paul Francisci conducted by the Brigade Criminelle of the French police in Paris on March 17 and 27, 1969).

"An indictment for carrying arms June 3, 1949, in Marseilles.

"Marcel Francisci explained . . . that from 1946, he had belonged to the Gaullist movement, the RPF (predecessor of UDR) . . . at the time of that questioning he was part of a political group which accompanied certain RPF candidates in (South France.) Frequent clashes took place with the opposing commandos.

Francisci said that to answer the various armed attacks made upon RPF candidates, his companions and he supplied themselves with arms of intimidation. He declared precisely, however, that he never made use of them.

"Since 1958, he Francisci had led an electoral campaign in Corsica in favor of UDR candidates. He doesn't hide his friendships with the deputy Jean Bozzi and Mr. Sanguinetti, whose politics he espouses . . ."

Alexandre Sanguinetti; member, national assembly; president, committee of national defence; member, 18-man executive committee of the UDR. Operational boss of all French police from 1960 to 1962.

Jean Bozzi; member national assembly from Corsica; secretary, national assembly; member, 25-man central committee of UDR. Operational boss of all French police from 1962 to 1967.

In 1964, the editor of a large Paris paper, a Corsican, received a call from Francisci. He said he understood that one of the paper's reporters was checking into the home life of Achille Peretti, a UDR deputy and president of the chamber of deputies. Francisci suggested that the story be killed. It was.

The ties between the underworld and the French government go back to the late Charles de Gaulle's campaign against the right-wing secret army organization (OAS) over Algeria.

De Gaulle called on the French underworld as he both mounted a counter-terrorist campaign against the OAS and sought to extinguish the sparks of revoltuion in France itself.

There were two tines to de Gaulle's anti-OAS pitchfork:

- The French version of the CIA — SDECE. (Service de Documentation Exterieure ed du Contre-Espionage.)
- The "parallel police" — SAC. (Service d'Action Civique.)

SPEDE (pronounced steck) set up a special action section, dubbed the "Barbouzes" that was composed of a counter-terrorist pack of killers. It consisted almost entirely of Vietnamese and specially recruited members of the French underworld.

SAC's basic function was to provide bodyguards for officials and candidates of de Gaulle's political party, UDR. Members of SAC were recruited from the ranks of old Gaullist soldiers, former resistance fighters and — one again — THE French underworld.

The war betweem de Gaulle and the Algerian terrorists was a dirty one. Many things were done by both the "Barbouzes" and SAC that no one in the French government mentions now.

The acts and the choice of the men to implement them had but one rationale: the survival of the Fifth Republic under de Gaulle.

There was at the time, and still is, little mob structure in France. The exception was the Corsican-dominated underworld of southern France, a series of mobs already beginning to deal in heroin.

It was to the leaders of these mobs that officials of de Gaulle's government went to recruit the counter-terror squads. The mobsters proved so effective that the French government continued to use them.

De Gaulle left the task of organizing SDECE and SAC to others. The most powerful of the government officials involved was Jacques Foccart, entrusted by de Gaulle to organize the Algerian counter-terror.

As secretary of the Community and African affairs, a post he still holds in the Pompidou government, Foccart was given extraordinary powers, including control of the African section of SDECE — the action section of SDECE — and a network of spies and killers who worked on the fringes of SDECE.

Foccart had two jobs: First to eliminate the OAS and prevent a revolution sympahtetic to them at home; second, to direct operations in Africa to assure that governments sympathetic to French economic and political domination remained in power, a task at which he still works.

The underworld supplied men from many gangs. Francisci, Dominic and Jean Venturi, Joseph Orsini and Antoine and Bartholemy Guerini were represented. Smaller gangs also provided muscle and guns.

Responsible to Foccart was Interior Minister Roger Frey, whose two successive deputies were Sanguinei (1960-62) and Bozi (1962-67).

The French do not have local police departments as such, functioning instead as a national unit, under the minister of the interior.

Thus while Frey, Sanguinetti and Bozzi were directing the nation's police, they were also forming counter-terror organizations whose members were being recruited from the mobs the police were supposed to be eradicating.

While the relationship of the mob and the Gaullists is the most significant government-underworld link in France — the UDR has ruled since 1958 under de Gaulle and Pompidou — it is not the only one.

Marseilles is run by the French Socialist Party. At election time socialist Mayor Gaston Deferre campaigns. And at election time the Venturi mob interests supply drivers, bodyguards and strongarm men for the socialist city ticket.

Dominic Venturi, 50, is the behind-the-scenes political power in Marseilles and operating director of the Francisci heroin syndicate.

His brother Jean, 52, spent several years in Montreal in the 1960s establishing heroin smuggling routes into the U.S. via Canada.

Defferre is not just the mayor of Marseilles. He is one of the strongest voices in the socialist party, the second strongest political organization in France. In 1969 he was the party's candidate for president of France.

He enlisted help of underworld to crush his opponents.

The Heroin Trail

Caids Manage World Market

The French underworld manages the world market in Heroin. Turkey produces and ships the raw material and North America supplies the customers, but it is the French caids (mob chieftains) who order the materials from Turkey, manufacture the heroin in France and arrange for its delivery to the North American markets.

Most of the French caids are either natives of Corsica or of Corsican descent. They are clannish and highly protective of one another. But unlike members of the Mafia in Sicily or the Cosa Nostra in the U.S., the French caids are not members of a single, monolithic organization.

Frequently the actual job of smuggling the heroin from France is contracted out by the caids to rings of professional smugglers. These couriers are paid from $1,000 to $1,400 a kilo for taking the heroin from France to caid-designated contacts abroad. Many of the couriers are non-Corsican, but most are French.

The caids and their lieutenants are all products of the frenetic Marseilles southern France underworld. They have risen from dingy, waterfront saloons to become owners of Paris nightclubs, restaurants, gambling casinos, summer villas, yachts, legitimate businesses, friendly politicians and fur-swathed mistresses.

Max Fernet, head of the national police.

"Over there (in America) organized crime really exists," he said. "There are big wheels with protection who are the head of it all. It is not the same thing in France.

"In narcotics, France plays fair and the Americans are aware of all our investigations. Cusack speaks our language badly and moreover I don't think he knows these drug problems so well . . ."

The evidence indicates, however, that Cusack was closer to the truth: if not untouchable, the heroin racketeers in France are, for the most part, untouched.

President Nixon last July sent France's President George Pompidou a congratulatory telegram following reports of the seizure of three heroin laboratories.

Nixon praised Pompidou "... and the French services for the extraordinary success in the discovery ... of three new heroin laboratories or depots for the production of illegal heroin."

Behind the prose were some less spectacular facts. The three labs were in fact one.

Taxes '72: Q & A

Q. I am now receiving pension payments from the Canada Pension Plan. Is the money I receive taxable, and should I include it when I report my income?

A. Yes, the income you are now receiving from the Canada Pension Plan is taxable and should be reported on your income tax return.

Q. My wife and I were married in September. She was working before marriage but has not worked since. Can I claim the full married exemption of $1,350 for her? What does she do about filing a return?

A. If she received no income after your marriage, you may claim the full married exemption of $1,350. Otherwise, calculate your exemption taking into account only the income she received after your marriage. If your wife is taxable or had tax deducted from her salary, she must file her own return.

Q. My nephew, aged 15, came to live with me last year when his parents were killed in an auto accident. Although I have not been appointed as his legal guardian, and no papers have been signed, he is totally dependent on me. Can I claim him as a dependant on my income tax form?

A. Yes. The fact that you have not been appointed his legal guardian would not bar you from claiming your nephew as a dependant if he otherwise qualified.

Q. We had a baby last year who only lived a few hours. Can we make any tax claim for her?

A. Yes, if a child is born in the year and lives, you may claim the child as a dependant for a $300 exemption.

For further information regarding these questions and answers, as well as any other income tax matters, readers should telephone the district office of the Department of National Revenue at 388-3551 between 8:15 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. Those outside the Victoria dialing area should phone Zenith 0-4000 (toll free) between 8:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m.

The Daily Colonist will not enter into any correspondence regarding the items, all of which were supplied by the Department of National Revenue. They are published by The Daily Colonist as a public service.

$511 Million Deficit For Automobile Trade

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada's deficit trade position on automobiles jumped to about $400 million in 1972, reaching year-end loss of $511 million, compared with $113 million in 1971, Statistics Canada reported Wednesday.

With the United States, where two-country trade is governed by a mutual pact, the statistics bureau showed a deficit of $41 million for Canada.

A spokesman for General Motors said in Washington Tuesday that the U.S. may have racked up a $100-million surplus in auto trade with Canada during 1972. However, the two countries use differing bases for the statistics they publish on this specific trade.

The $511-million deficit for Canada's auto and auto parts trade is the highest since 1967, when the Canadian statistics bureau showed a total shortfall of $637 million. In 1965, when the Canada-U.S. pact had just been agreed to and had not yet taken full bite, the deficit was $738 million.

By Canadian figures, the pact has produced a surplus in Canadian trade with the U.S. only in two years — 1970 and 1971. The 1970 excess of Canadian exports to the U.S. over imports from the U.S. is set at $202 million and for the following year the favorable balance is set at $194 million.

But only in 1970 did Canada show a favorable trade balance with the whole world, according to the statistics bureau's figures — a $95 million edge in 1970.

Over-all, the bureau's figures show a total Canadian auto deficit with the U.S. of $1,900 million since 1965 and a total world trading deficit of $2,896 million from 1965 to the end of 1972.

Explaining the jump in 1972's deficit, the statistics bureau said there was a contraction of $164 million in the previous 1971 surplus for complete motor vehicles and of $43 million in the international trade in snowmobiles. There also was an increase of $191 million in the Canadian deficit on motor vehicle parts.

Shutdowns at General Motors plants in Ste. Therese, Que., and Oshawa, Ont., for model and line changes "had an impact" on the 1972 figures, the bureau sid.

The turnaround from 1971's surplus of $194 million with the U.S. to a deficit of $41 million was produced by a 19 per-cent increase in U.S. imports, to a total of $4,666 million, set against a 12-per-cent gain in total exports, to $4,625 million.

Surrender to U.S.–Opposition

Safeguards Temporary

OTTAWA (CP) — The "so-called safeguards" for Canadian production in the 1965 Canada-U.S. auto pact were put in the pact for temporary purposes, Industry Minister Alastair Gillespie told the Commons Wednesday.

Opposition benches immediately characterized that statement as a surrender to the United States.

U.S. officials have made similar comments in the past when demanding that the safeguards be removed from the pact. The safeguards guarantee Canadian auto plants a certain proportion of North American auto production and jobs, but the U.S. has argued that Canada has benefited too much from the pact.

The exchange came just after Statistics Canada released figures showing that Canada's string of surpluses in auto trade was interrupted last year with a $41-million deficit. A General Motors spokesman in the U.S. had said Tuesday the deficit for Canada was $100 million.

Gillespie declined to explain the difference between figures cited by Statistics Canada and General Motors.

'CALL GENERAL MOTORS'

Referring to questions from Allan Lawrence (PC—Northumberland-Durham), Gillespie said "if he'd like to find out the reason for it, I suggest he call General Motors U.S."

Edward Broadbent (NDP—Oshawa-Whitby) persistently demanded to know whether the government is preparing to drop the safeguards. He also accused the minister of being evasive.

Gillespie replied:

"We're committed to making the auto pact work so there will be increased employment .... I can see no point at this time in creating baseless fears in the public concerning this phrase, the so-called safeguards."

Gold Market Trade Nervous

LONDON (UPI) — The dollar lost ground against European money Wednesday while gold traded nervously to end higher.

On the London free market gold closed at $85-$87 an ounce.

"Business was fair but the amount was nothing like the levels of last week," one dealer said.

"Firmness of the market was attributed to the U.S. denial that Washington has any plans to sell bullion from reserves," market men said.

The world's major gold producer, South Africa, meanwhile, revealed that it has been selling from its gold reserves for the first time since last April.

(In Tokyo the value of the dollar went up sharply Wednesday for the first time since Japan floated the yen Feb. 14 in the wake of the 10 per cent devalutaion of the American currency.

(Dollars changed hands on the Tokyo exchange at a floating rate of 270 yen to the dollar, considerably up from recent days when the price of U.S. currency hovered around 264 yen.)

Italian Bill To Scuttle Costly Ships

ROME (AP) — The government wants to scuttle Italy's fleet of luxury ocean liners, sometimes called costly "floating monuments" of another era of travel.

A bill sent to Parliament calls for dismantling the fleet of the state-controlled Finmare group by 1977 because of huge financial losses.

New Aid for Blind

Tones Speed Up Reading

MONTREAL (CP) — The lexaphone, a device scarcely larger than a typewriter, enables the blind to read faster than any machine of its kind in the world, says Dr. C. Y. Suen who helped develop it.

The machine has a scanner which runs across the printed lines of a page and translates letters, numbers and punctuation marks into coded tones.

The reader hears the code for each letter through earphones and, after learning to decipher the signals, can read the material letter by letter.

Suen, assistant professor of computer science at Sir George William University, said a blind person can read 30 to 40 words a minute after about 200 hours of training.

He said this may seem slow for the sighted reader but the alternatives for the blind — braille and tapes—are limiting because only about 10 to 15 per cent of the blind are able to read braille.

The machine was developed during the last eight years at the University of British Columbia by Prof. M. P. Beddoes and Dr. Suen when they were graduate students.

About half a dozen lexaphones now are being tested across the country, including one on loan to the Montreal Association for the Blind.

"It seems a tremendous amount of motivation is needed by the blind to learn how to operate the machine," he said. "As well, even if the code is mastered, the machine emits a slightly different signal with different sizes of print."

Suen agreed modifications are needed, adding that the ultimate goal is a compact, portable machine capable of reading any printed page in any language.

"One of the problems at the association is that the lexaphone is still new and there is no one properly trained to teach the reading method.

Not a Battle, But a Massacre

WOUNDED KNEE, S.D. (UPI) — Bury My Heart At Wounded Knee is more than the title of a book or a line from a poem here on the Pine Ridge Oglala Sioux Reservation.

It was here, along the banks of Wounded Knee Creek, that the American Indians clashed for the last time with the U.S. Cavalry.

What happened is listed in the historical dictionaries and landmarks as a battle. Massacre might be a more apt term.

No one is yet sure how many died along the snowy river bank on Dec. 29, 1890, when the guns of the U.S. Seventh Cavalry — Gen. George Custer's old command — opened fire on an encampment of 106 Sioux warriors and 250 women and children.

The historical marker says 146 were killed. History books put the figure variously as 200 to 300.

Many of the bodies — along with those of soldiers killed in the crossfire that day — lie in a mass grave on a hill overlooking the site. A Roman Catholic church has been built beside the grave and it was this church which was seized by Indian insurgents Tuesday night.

In the summer of 1890, what became known as "the messiah craze" spread through the Sioux nation. Spiritual leaders preached that by dancing "the ghost dance" and by wearing "ghost shirts" warriors would be impervious to the white man's bullets, the soldiers and settlers would become helpless and the days of the wild buffalo herds would return.

Tensions reached the flare point Dec. 15 when Chief Sitting Bull, the legendary conqueror of Custer, and a ghost dancer, was killed by an Indian policeman on the nearby Standing Rock Reservation.

Forty of Sitting Bull's warriors jumped the reservation and joined a band led by Chief Big Foot on the Cheyenne River. Big Foot led the band across the Black Hills and the Badlands toward Pine Ridge.

On Dec. 28, Big Foot surrendered without a struggle and was brought to Wounded Knee to camp. Guns were set up on the heights around the camp. A weapons search was ordered.

What happened then is uncertain. A gun went off in the camp. The cavalry guns opened up and the troops moved in. The Indians, virtually helpless, were driven down the creek. Big Foot's frozen body was found in the snow.

"Bury my heart at Wounded Knee" are not the words of an Indian. They come from a poem by Stephen Vincent Benet and became the title of a 1971 best seller about the last battles of the Indians.

But Wounded Knee was hardly a battle.

Cheaters Abound

KINGSTON, Ont. (CP) — More than 70 per cent of the unemployment insurance recipients investigated here last week during a special investigative blitz may be disqualified, a spokesman for the Unemployment Insurance Commission (UIC) said Wednesday.

Roy Hancock, acting district manager of the UIC, said the commission has developed a profile of the abuser and estimates 100 to 143 recipients will be disqualified.

Investigators from outside Kingston were brought in to help the five permanent investigators here, who study about 35 to 40 recipients a day.

Hancock said preliminary results indicate the profile is working well "but we have to find out if this profile will work everywhere or if its effectiveness is confined to particular regions."

MOSCOW (UPI) — Soviet scientists have created a low-cost catalyst which renders harmless automobile exhaust fumes and factory gases, the official news agency Tass said Tuesday.

Hearing Sought By Broadcasters

OTTAWA (CP) — The Canadian Association of Broadcasters asked the Canadian Radio-Television Commission Wednesday to hold a public hearing into a document prepared by the association in conjunction with the Canadian Association of Police Chiefs.

The broadcasters' association said in a letter to the commission that its attempts to clear up misunderstandings about the document through press releases and letters to editors haven't had the desired effect.

There have been suggestions that an agreement has been reached to control news in times of crisis.

The association said it "is of the opinion that the only avenue left open to us for correction of these misstatements, and a full statement of the fact, would be a discussion of the real purpose of the document and an explanation of its background in an open, impartial and objective forum."

A radio-television commission spokesman said the commission considered the request Wednesday and a decision whether to allow the hearing is expected by Friday.

Datsun has won more rally championships than any other car in Canada. Against the best competitors. Under the worst conditions.

So what? Maybe all you really need is a car that behaves sensibly and economically in traffic or on the freeway.

So this: the things that have helped us win rallies are standard equipment on the Datsuns you'll find in your dealer's showroom.

Front disc brakes, overhead cam power, independent rear suspension and tough unit body construction add up to a car that will survive wherever you drive. And because they're all yours at no extra cost, they also add up to a lot more car for your dollar.

*Datsun 510 2-door sedan: $2615. Suggested retail price F.O.B. Vancouver, Toronto, Montreal, Halifax warehouses. Local freight, licence, provincial tax, if applicable, extra.

Once again in 1972- for the fifth time since 1967- Datsun was awarded the coveted Canadian National Rally Championship!

U.S. News Sources 'Dwindling'—Editor

WASHINGTON (AP) — The editor of the Los Angeles Times said Tuesday that news sources "already are dwindling" because of United States court attempts to compel reporters to disclose confidential material in cases such as the one which forced his Washington bureau manager behind bars.

William Thomas testified in support of legislation granting reporters absolute immunity from being compelled to testify in judicial proceedings.

Thomas told the Senate constitutional rights subcommittee a subpoena against the Times in the Watergate case was only one of many the newspaper has been forced to fight in the last few years.

In the Watergate case, defence lawyers, without objection by the prosecution, subpoenaed notes, inter-office memos and the tape recording of a 5½-hour interview of a key prosecution witness, Alfred Baldwin.

Washington bureau manager John Lawrence and the reporters who interviewed Baldwin, Jack Nelson and Ronald Ostrow, were threatened with jail if they refused to turn over the information. Lawrence did go to jail for part of one day while the legal battle continued. The subpoena action was dropped after Baldwin authorized The Times to turn over the tapes.

Earlier Tuesday, a reporter for the Memphis Tenn. Commercial-Appeal, Joe Weiler, said his own experience in fighting a subpoena attempt by a state Senate committee produced a "chilling effect" on newsgathering.

Cheaper Flights Rejected

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — The United States threw the North Atlantic airline fare structure into disarray Tuesday by rejecting cheaper rates proposed by four European airlines.

Some of the airlines — British Overseas Airways Corp., Lufthansa of West Germany, Alitalia of Italy and Olympic of Greece — had already advertised their new rates, due to have come into effect on April 1, with the proviso that they were subject to government negotiation.

The U.S. government's Civil Aeronautics Board said the fares were too low.

BOAC said in January it planned to cut the individual return fare between Britain and New York to about $14 and has already accepted bookings from passengers with the proviso that the fare may be changed — for flights after April 1.

Other European airlines proposed similar rates, while the leading overseas U.S. airlines — Pan American World Airways and Trans World Airlines — proposed a rate of $199. This has already been approved by the U.S. board.

Brain Drain Nearing

TORONTO (CP) — Few Canadian professionals are emigrating to the United States than at any time since 1955 but the brain drain from Canada is likely to increase again soon, says the Technical Service Council.

The council, an industry-sponsored placement service, has issued statistics showing the number of emigrating engineers, 400 in 1972, is down sharply from the 15-year peak of 1,408 in fiscal 1968.

Layoffs in the space and defence-related industries created high unemployment among American engineers and scientists and the U.S. labor department subsequently took all areas of engineering off the immigration preference list, it says.

Canadians approved by the labor department face a six- to 29-month wait before entering the U.S., discouraging employers from sponsoring Canadians for specific jobs.

The council says the U.S. economy now has turned upward and some observers are forecasting another engineering shortage.

Victoria Council Mourns Ove Witt:

A Friend Who Has Gone

By HUBERT BEYER

They had met to formally express their sorrow at the death of their colleague on city council, Victoria Ald. Ove Witt.

Witt detested formalities. So it was, perhaps, fitting that the special council meeting Wednesday morning was devoid of all ceremony and ritual.

Mayor and aldermen became just eight men who talked sadly about a friend who was gone.

Mayor Peter Pollen described Witt as a "courageous man whose strong interest and concern for the community has been an inspiring force in council."

He said that even while he was ill, Witt was kept informed about all civic matters and he never stopped being active as chairman of the city's parks and recreation committee.

"I think it's as a result of his boundless energy that the city has made more progress in the area of parks and recreation during his term of office than ever before," the mayor said.

Pollen said a byelection will have to be held to fill the vacancy on council caused by Witt's death and will likely be held March 31, coinciding with the $22 million hospital referendum.

Convention March 16

A two-day convention of the Mechanical Contractors' Association of B.C. will be opened March 16 at the Empress Hotel by Attorney-General Alex Macdonald.

Ald. Mike Young said it was a "measure of the man that every member of city council considered Ove a personal friend."

Saanich Mayor Hugh Curtis said on behalf of his municipal council that the death of Witt was deeply felt. "Greater Victoria has lost an enthusiastic, young civic politician."

Curtis, who said his personal friendship with Witt went back a long time, added he was particularly impressed with the man's concern in recreation and park matters.

Witt's prime concern had always been young people. Throughout his three years as an alderman, Witt has pushed council into all sorts of schemes that would benefit youth.

He was instrumental in setting up a correspondence education program for high school dropouts and got city council to make a grant toward that program.

Parks and recreation facilities, he always said, were the answer to the problem of juvenile delinquency. Give the kids something to do and they won't get into trouble, he used to say.

Last year, he suggested that council put a $15 million "environment referendum" before voters to finance construction of malls, purchases of waterfront property, building of more playgrounds and development of existing parkland — a suggestion that was not taken up.

A civic funeral will be held at 2 p.m. Monday at Fairfield United Church.

The family requests that instead of flowers, donations be made to the renal kidney unit, 1900 Fort, Royal Jubilee Hospital.

Determination, Energy

Goals Achieved, Helped Others

By DAVID A. BROWN
Colonist News Editor

Ove Witt was the embodiment of the dreams of so many Canadians born in distant lands.

With that special determination and energy fired in a young heart in a new country, he achieved his private goals in business, then counterweighted success with service — to Victoria, his neighbors, his fellow citizens.

A gruff voice barely betrayed the traces of a Danish accent he strove to erase, and it poorly veiled the warmth of his personality and his deeply sincere concern for his community. His grin seemed to outspan his face, his friendships seemed universal.

Baker's Son

Ove (everyone knew him as "Ovie," but his native pronunciation was more like "Ovuh") was born in Copenhagen, the fourth child in a family of five, the son of a baker.

During the war he served as a teenage courier for the Danish underground as part of a group mainly concerned with smuggling downed airmen back to England.

Postwar Denmark, as in most of Europe, seemed to offer a limited future for a youth with his drive and goals. He took the trans-Atlantic path of the old Viking voyages for the vague promise of Canada.

Cross-Country

Passage across the country was financed by stints on farms and in logging camps. He arrived in Victoria in 1952, got a job on a construction project and later was a bartender in downtown hotels.

Ove broke into public notice in 1955 when he trained Tacoma logger Bert Thomas and guided him across Juan de Fuca Strait in the first conquest of that treacherous and windswept body of water. His name has been a local household world ever since.

Health Club

A few years later he became a professional masseur, opening a health club in the Stratheona Hotel which grew from a set of barbells and a massage table in an unused suite to one of the most splendidly-equipped salons of its kind in the province, occupying a large portion of the hotel below the main lobby.

His clientele included cabinet ministers, hockey players and visiting celebrities, many of whose pictures adorn the walls of the club.

Civic Politics

Ove entered civic politics in 1968, losing by a narrow margin in a bid for a Victoria aldermanic seat. He tried again the following year and succeeded, devoting much of his first term to the problems and expectations of the community's young people — the Cool-Aid hostel, the Boys Club — and working hard for the expansion of recreation facilities and parks.

He spent long hours at city hall with the belief that at least one alderman should be available most of a day to meet the public and discuss its problems and complaints face to face.

Rough Charm

His never-let-up approach to civic work earned him respect and admiration of his council colleagues and the staff at all levels of the administration who were subjected to his intense probing, tempered by the charm of his rough-edged, earthy friendliness.

Well past the midway point of his second term, a hereditary kidney disease, that had already afflicted other members of his Danish family, worsened, forcing Ove into hospital. With strides made by medicine in recent years — the lifesaving blood-washing machine and the successes of kidney transplants — his hopes for a good measure of life were undiminished.

Kidneys Removed

His diseased kidneys were removed and he awaited word that healthy replacements were available to restore his body.

Shortly after midnight Tuesday, while he was undergoing his tri-weekly treatment on the dialysis unit at Royal Jubilee Hospital, a blood clot which reached his heart severed life in his 45th year.

Ove's family — his wife Marian, his sons Christopher, 14, and Gregory, 12; his daughters Mereta, 10, and Tanya, 8 — shares a loss with Victoria and with the countless people who were lucky enough to know him as a friend, myself perhaps one of his oldest and closest.

In Denmark Ove leaves two brothers, Hans and Helge, and two sisters, Birthe and Annie.

Region Takes to Land Law

With a few minor reservations, the Capital Regional Board came out in strong support Wednesday of the objectives of the land-use legislation proposed by the provincial government.

There was only one dissenting vote. Earl Pallister, director for Langford, was against the motion to support the provincial government's plan "because the farmer will get it if this goes through."

Directors decided to seek a meeting with Agriculture Minister Dave Stupich to discuss a number of amendments to the legislation. The amendments were proposed by regional board chairman Jim Campbell.

One of his suggestions is that members of the proposed land commission be appointed for definite terms and that nominations from the Union of B.C. Municipalities be seriously considered.

Campbell told the regional board he is in complete agreement with the aims of the proposed legislation. The preservation of farmland, he said, was a vital matter in B.C.

When Pallister interjected that the legislation doesn't provide for compensation to owners of farmland for any loss they may suffer because they can't use it for purposes other than farming, he was cut short by Marc Holmes, director for Salt Spring Island.

"That's the whole guts of the act, to provide for farmland. A farmer has four choices: he can sit on it, sell it to someone who wants to farm it, farm it himself, or lease it out for farming," Holmes said.

Hearings Preferred

UBCM Seeks Delay In Land Freezing

By BARBARA McLINTOCK
Colonist Reporter

A delay in pushing through the B.C. government's controversial and wide-ranging Land Commission act is expected to be urged today by the executive of the Union of B.C. Municipalities.

The executive hopes to meet morning with government representatives, including some cabinet ministers.

About 14 executive members of the UBCM met behind closed doors for five hours until early this morning at the Empress Hotel to work out details of the presentation they plan to make to the government.

Indications were that they would ask that public hearings be held on the bill before it becomes law in the province, and that the legislation be delayed so all segments of the community would have an opportunity to study and discuss the bill and its implications.

Members were understood to have agreed with the aim of the bill, but were concerned about the effects of a number of its specific proposals.

During the meeting particular concern was expressed about provisions which might take away municipal and regional board zoning rights.

Members agreed that recognized community plans which have been supported by local zoning bylaws and approved by the provincial cabinet must remain unaffected by the land commission.

Another area of major concern was that of compensation to those whose lands would be affected.

Some members expressed the view that it was important for individuals to have more rights of appeal against designations under the legislation and that provisions be added for public hearings on certain designations.

Attending the meeting from Vancouver Island were Oak Bay Mayor Frances Elford, Ladysmith Mayor Kay Grouhel, and Salt Spring Island regional board director Marc Holmes.

Farming School In B.C. Plans

Establishment of an agricultural training college for the province is currently under discussion by B.C. agriculture and education departments, Agriculture Minister Dave Stupich said Wednesday.

Stupich said the college would provide practical farming training for young farmers as opposed to the more experimental and academic orientation of a university.

He was addressing the inaugural meeting Wednesday of the new environmental group, Citizens' Association to Save the Environment (C.A.S.E.), where he faced his first public questioning on the five-man provincial land commission proposed by B.C.

Discussions on the college were at a very preliminary stage but Stupich said they showed the government was concerned about helping the young farmer.

Replying to criticism of the new legislation and the freeze on farmland that preceded it, Stupich said that no one disagreed with the goal of the new legislation to prevent precious farmland from "disappearing much faster than our country can afford to let it disappear."

Critics had said this was the wrong way to do it. But, said Stupich, "nobody yet has suggested any better way of doing it."

He said that out of 213,000 acres of prime agricultural land in the Okanagan water basin, some 56,000 acres had turned over to housing, industrial and commercial development. It was the government's duty to "put our house in order" and "save that land which is most suitable for agricultural production."

Fire Destroys Storage Shed

Fire destroyed a large storage shed at Williams Auto Wrecking, 2300 Munns Road, in unorganized territory north of Thetis Lake Wednesday evening. The fire was outside the fire protection district and no fire department went to it. There were no injuries.

Housing Agency Role Under District Study

Capital Regional Board is considering the possibility of becoming a development arm for the provincial government by undertaking major housing programs.

The way to go about it was outlined to regional board directors Wednesday by George Chatterton, provincial director of public housing.

Chatterton told regional board members they could apply for letters patent which would give them authority to undertake housing programs on behalf of the provincial government.

The provincial government, Chatterton said, would look after the financing of the projects. The regional board would act as agent, select the property, develop it and administer the finished project.

Annual maintenance deficits, he said, would be financed on a regional level. Money for this purpose could be raised by levying a half-mill charge on all member municipalities.

In the past, such programs, Chatterton said, had been undertaken by municipalities, but there was a definite advantage to placing the responsibility into the regional board's hands.

Housing shortages, he said, could be tackled on a regional level.

Mortgage money, Chatterton said, was available from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

He added that the provincial government would not favor any type of public-housing scheme, similar to Rose-Blanshard urban renewal project.

Any project planned under the proposed regional scheme would have to reflect the nature of the community in which it was built. Projects would consist of rental units.

The provincial government, he said, would support the projects by financing the purchase of the land under its new land bank scheme. Under the terms of that policy, the land would remain in public hands.

No decision on whether or not the regional board will undertake such housing ventures is expected for a while.

Oak Bay Depot

Recycle Proposal

Oak Bay residents will be able to take their old newspapers to the municipal yard at 1771 Elgin for recycling each Saturday if council accepts the recommendation of its B Committee.

At a meeting Wednesday evening, the committee decided to support a project that would turn the municipal yard into a recycling reception point for bundled newspapers each Saturday.

The program would cost $105 a week to operate for an estimated return of $50 — the price the municipality would receive for 10 tons of newspapers.

Three municipal trucks would be available to transport the paper to a contractor in Victoria West. The yard would be open between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. every Saturday.

'Give Elderly More Say'

A conference on the problems and co-ordination of sevices to the elderly will be sponsored in Victoria next month by the provincial government.

Rehabilitation Minister Norman Levi announced the conference Wednesday after cabinet members met with a group from the Social Planning and Review Council to discuss the council's study on community care for the elderly.

Garth Homer of Victoria, a member of the council who helped to compile the 179-page study on community care for old people, said the recommendations were well received.

"They agree it would be a very basic document for future policies regarding care of senior citizens," Homer said.

One of the main thrusts of the report, Homer said, is that the elderly should play a greater role in their own institutions. This would mean over-65 volunteer workers, mutual visits, intensive craft programs and other things.

Also, inspectors should be trained by the government to assist operators in the running of their homes and institutions, with an accent on social well-being.

Thirdly, old people needing extended care should not be moved from their own communities, if at all possible.

Levi said the directions outlined in the report were "very much the way we want to go."

Canucks Continue To Head Toward Worst Season Yet

Vancouver's uninspired Canucks Wednesday continued to head towards what could be the worst of their three seasons in the National Hockey League.

Starting with a chance to move within six points of sixth place in the East Division, the Canucks took a 7-2 clobbering in Toronto and were left 10 points behind the Maple Leafs.

Winners only three times in 32 road games this season, the Canucks, as they so often do, got the game's first goal. Then they yielded, unable to match the likes of Dave Keon, Darryl Sittler, Rick Kehoe and Jim McKenny.

Keon, skating in top form and the standout player on the ice, scored his 27th and 28th goals. Sittler, now at 22 goals, had two scoring shots and provided an assist; Kehoe had his 27th goal and an assist and McKenny drew three merited assists.

It was the fourth straight setback for the Canucks, and it left their record for their last 12 games at 1-10-1 — a streak in which they have yielded 68 goals although their lone victory was a shutout.

The West Coast club has only 16 victories and 40 points from its first 65 games and is almost certain not to match its first-season effort of 24 wins and 56 points. It may not even match last season's 48 points.

Napoles Retains Ring Crown With Knockout

Suffering two cuts early in the fight and bleeding from a slash alongside his right eye, Napoles put Lopez down for the full count and more to win after one minute 36 seconds of the seventh round.

The champion was so worried that he cradled Lopez's head in his arms while doctors revived the challenger.

The 32-year-old Napoles, despite a cut over the bridge of his nose suffered in the second round and another to the right of his right eye in the third, was in command.

Both Napoles of Mexico City, and Lopez of Los Angeles, weighed 146½ for the bout with Napoles the 2-1 favorite.

The end came with lightning suddenness. Although Napoles was ahead, there had been no knockdowns and neither fighter had been staggered until the one, explosive punch that brought an end as about 14,000 watched the action.

Bruins Obtain Broderick

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Ken Broderick, the Western Hockey League's leading goalkeeper, has been traded by San Diego Gulls to Boston Bruins of the National Hockey League, effective at season's end, the Gulls said.

In exchange, the Gulls got three players and cash. The players, a goalkeeper, forward and defenceman, were not not named. They will join the Gulls next season.

Broderick, 31, has allowed an average of 2.92 goals a game this season, his third as a professional. He also spent five seasons on the Canadian national team and played in the 1968 Olympics. He played seven games for Minnesota North Stars of the NHL in 1969-70.

Nanaimo Rink Remains In Thick of Title Race

LARRY ROSE
Special to the Colonist

CHARLOTTETOWN — Karen Kaese and her Nanaimo rink Wednesday proved beyond doubt that they belong here.

The British Columbia foursome has stayed with the leaders all week in the Macdonald Lassie Canadian ladies curling championship, and today find themselves with a serious shot at the national title.

Mrs. Kaese and her rink of third Shannon Blackburn, second Loretta Ahlstrom and lead Donna Dunn won three times Wednesday to retain a share of second place.

B.C. shares the runner-up spat with defending-champion Saskatchewan — upset in the afternoon draw by unheralded Prince Edward Island — entering today's final two rounds. Manitoba is undefeated at 7-0 while B.C. and Saskatchewan are right behind with 6-1 records.

Today, the Nanaimo rink faces Saskatchewan and Alberta. Manitoba goes against giant-killing P.E.I., then faces the tough Saskatchewan rink skipped by Vera Pezer of Saskatoon.

Joan Ingram's strong-sweeping Winnipeg rink must lose if B.C. or Saskatchewan is to have a chance. But after what has happened here this week, the possibility is far from remote and at this stage a playoff may be in the offing for Friday.

Mrs. Kaese counted three with last rock to defeat Ontario, 10-7, in Wednesday's morning round, all but knocking Isabel Munro's Arnprior foursome out of contention.

Then on the afternoon draw, B.C. trounced winless Newfoundland, 13-5, before defeating Nova Scotia, 13-7, in the day's third draw.

Meanwhile, the P.E.I. rink skipped by Elayne Thomson delighted the standing-room crowed at Charlottetown Curling Club with a win over mighty Saskatchewan.

P.E.I. stole three on the eighth end when Miss Pezer, seeking her third straight national title, came out light with last rock.

It gave P.E.I. a 7-6 lead and paved the way for an 8-7 win.

B.C. led, 5-4, after five ends against Ontario and stole two on the sixth for a 7-4 margin. Ontario got one back on the seventh and took advantage of some B.C. misses to steal on the eighth and ninth ends.

Mrs. Kaese had the hammer coming home, and she needed it, making a pressure hit to remove Ontario's shot rock for the win.

B.C. scored five against Newfoundland on the third end when skip Ann Bowering came up short of the house and gave Mrs. Kaese an open draw for five.

After Newfoundland closed to 6-5, Mrs. Kaese drew for four on the seventh end when Mrs. Bowering was heavy. B.C. wrapped it up on the eighth by stealing three more on another miss by the St. John's skip.

On the evening draw, a last-rock miss by Nova Scotia-skip Betty Hodgins gave B.C. four on the opening end, Mrs. Kaese made a draw to the eight-foot on the fifth end to lead 8-3 and won going away.

"We really feel we've got a chance if someone can knock off Winnipeg," Mrs. Kaese said Wednesday night. "We're curling stronger than at the start of the week and right now we're ready for Alberta and Saskatchewan, as tough as they are."

Cougars, Bruins Tie

By STAN COOPER

New Westminster Bruins made their last appearance in Victoria this season a night to remember.

Bruins, who have earned the infamous reputation as the ruffians of the Western Canada Hockey League, tried to intimidate the Cougars with their brawling tactics.

The move backfired on the Royal City squad, who had to scramble for a 3-3 tie.

The game was hardly two minutes old when the antics started.

The players on the ice, with the exception of the goaltenders, paired off and engaged in a series of wild demonstrations that left the rink littered with equipment and stained with blood.

When referee Vern Davidson of Vancouver was able to restore order, a total of six players were banished to the dressing rooms and 170 minutes in penalties assessed.

The main combatants, and earning early showers, were Clayton Pachall, Vic Mercredi and Gordie Lane of the Bruins and Frank Hyndman, Kim Clackson and Cal Kitching of the Cougars.

Clackson took a clean decision from the flashy Mercredi, who managed to gnaw the skin from the young defenceman's right index finger while being pummelled. Mercredi, the team's top scorer and on-ice leader, had to be helped off the ice.

After the minutes-long skirmish, the teams settled down and, although playing with a minimum number of substitutes, played entertaining hockey for the announced crowd of 3104. Only a few minor incidents marred the rest of the end-to-end action.

The teams were deadlocked 2-2 after the first period and Bruins held a 3-2 edge after 40 minutes.

Bruins, playing their ninth game in 11 days, gagged in the third period and only superb netminding by Terry Richardson held the Cougars out.

Captain Dale Cook knotted the score for Victoria in the third minute and missed two glorious chances later in the period when Cougars had by far the better of the play.

Richardson and the other draft-age players were being scouted by George Armstrong of Toronto Maple Leafs and Frank Mario of the St. Louis Blues. The National Hockey League scouts are making a swing through the three B.C. cities in the WCHL this week.

Richardson managed 28 saves and had a very stead game. A the other end, Perry Mulhall was equally effective, although having only 23 saves.

Don Dziadyk and Al McLaren were the other Cougar scorers and Ron Kennedy, Ron Greschner and Barry Smith scored for the Bruins.

The result gave the Bruins a 5-3-2 edge in the 10-game series this season, not nearly so impressive as the 10 straight victories they potted in the 1971-72 campaign.

Sobchuk Challenges For Scoring Lead

Tom Lysiak, defending scoring champion in the Western Canada Hockey League, has been battling linemate Lanny McDonald for the points lead for several weeks.

Now a new challenger has emerged.

He's Dennis Sobchuk, the flashy centre with Regina Pats who set a WCHL record with 10 points in a single game this season.

Sobchuk, the rookie-of-the-year in 1971-72, trails Lysiack by only two points as the scoring derby reaches the home stretch.

Lysiak regained the lead on Tuesday night when he counted four points in a game against Swift Current Broncos to run his total to 130, including a leading 81 assists.

Sobchuk has 58 goals for the Pats, who have nine game remaining, the same number as Medicine Hat.

McDonald has been bumped to third place at 121 points but he holds a comfortable edge on Darcy Rota of Edmonton Oil Kings and Blaine Stroughton of Flin Flon Bombers, tied for fourth at 110.

Ed Humphreys of Saskatoon Blades leads the goalkeepers with a 2.52 goals-against average and four shutouts. Harvey Stewart of Flin Flon has a 2.89 average and John Davidson of the Calgary Centennials is second in shutouts with two.

Dale Cook of Victoria Cougars has fallen off the pace in recent weeks but still leads the club with 40 goals and 78 points.

HOUSTON — Duke Harris' goal Wednesday night kept two streaks going in the World Hockey Association.

Harris scored at 1:48 of overtime to give Houston Aeros a 3-2 win over Alberta Oilers. The win was the fourth straight for Houston while Oilers suffered their sixth straight loss.

The win capped a come-from-behind effort by Aeros. Rusty Patenaude put the Oilers in front late in the first period but Ted Taylor evened the score at 17:03 of the second period with the first of his two goals.

Taylor's 27th goal, early in the third period, set the overtime stage for Harris.

Jim Norris was solid in the nets for Alberta, blocking 36 shots. He was busiest in the third period when Aeros poured 18 shots at him. He was sent crashing into a goal post late in the period but stayed in the game.

Flyers Top Nixons In Playoff Opener

CHEMAINUS — Fuller Lake Flyers downed Victoria Nixon's Trucking, 5-3, Wednesday night in the opener of the South Vancouver Island Junior "B" Hockey League playoffs.

Two goals by Mike Rogerson and one goal each from Paul Livingstone, Peter Rogerson and Ray Stubbington gave Flyers the lead in the best-of-three semi-final series. Second game is scheduled Saturday at Victoria's Memorial Arena starting at 5:30.

Larry Hansen, with two goals, and Norm Allen scored for Nixons, who held a 1-0 lead after one period but were behind, 2-3, at the end of the second.

Juan de Fuca Metro Toyota Gulls, the league champions, and fourth-place Saanich Block Brothers will meet in the other semi-final series.

Titans maintained their unbeaten record by crushing the visiting Mount View Hornets, 27-3, for their fourth win in five starts. Their other game finished in a tie.

At Oak Bay, the Bays trimmed previously-unbeaten Claremont Spartans, 10-6, to move into second spot. Spartans dropped to third.

Player Rep Accept New

MIAMI (AP) — Major-league baseball players representatives accepted Wednesday a new three-year agreement calling for salary arbitration and the mandatory consent of veteran players before they are traded or sent to the minors.

All 22 representatives at the special meeting voted for acceptance. Two were not present — Oakland and Baltimore representatives.

"I think all the players will be very happy with all the details," said Minnesota Twins' pitcher Jim Perry.

Fine Skating, Rival's Spills Put Karen Close to Crown

BRATISLAVA, Czechoslovakia (CP) — Karen Magnussen will do her free skating performance at the world figure skating championships today and the odds are that shortly after she finishes she'll be the champion.

The 20-year-old from North Vancouver took a commanding lead in the women's singles Wednesday, due principally to two factors: Her own splendid skating and the disastrous effort of her closest competition, Janet Lynn of the United States.

The Canadian champion won the two-minute compulsory free skating program while Miss Lynn fell twice and finished a shocking 11th.

Karen, a statuesque blonde, won the compulsory figures Tuesday and with her two first-place finishes has a lead of 8.99 points over the American. That lead is considered unsurmountable.

Miss Magnussen and Miss Lynn were rated co-favorites for the title going into the championship, following the retirement of champion Trixie Schuba of Austria.

However, Miss Lynn's hopes were all but destroyed by her two falls. She fell attempting a double axel and again while trying a double toe loop.

Miss Magnussen said she had mixed feelings about the day's events. She was happy to retain first place but saddened by the fate of Miss Lynn.

Karen is in first place on combined marks with nine ordinals and 198.14 points. Miss Lynn retained second place with 21 ordinals and 189.15 points.

The ordinals represent placings by the nine judges and mean that they all rate Karen No. 1.

Jean Scott of Britain is third with 39 ordinals and 184.65 points while Karen Iten of Switzerland is fourth at 40 and 185.38.

Miss Lynn was placed 11th in the program and her problems seemed to overshadow a sensational fourth-place finish by Lynn Nightingale of Ottawa — this is the 16-year-old who beat Miss Magnussen in free skating at the Canadian championships.

Lynn, in her first crack at world-class skating, defied the pressure and produced an impressive and flowing performance, including a superb double axel.

The other Canadians, Barbara Berezowski and David Porter from Toronto, were 14th.

As expected, Ludmila Pakhomova and Alexander Gorshkov of Russia were solidly in the lead after the two compulsory dances. Angelika and Erich Buck of West Germany were second with Hilary Green and Glyn Watts of Britain in third spot.

Champs Finish Without Music

BRATISLAVA, Czechoslovakia (CP) — A dazzling performance by the incomparable Irina Rodnina and Alexander Zaitsev of the Soviet Union took the couple to the pairs title at the world figure skating championships Wednesday.

Another Russian couple, Ludmila Smirnova and Alexei Ulanov, were second while Manuela Gross and Uwe Kagelmann of East Germany were third.

The tiny Miss Rodnina and her tall partner appeared unconcerned about the abrupt halt to their music and they skated on despite arm waving appeals from competition officials to half.

Their performance was nearly perfect and they were rewarded with nine marks of 5.9 for technique and eight 5.9s and one 5.8 for artistic merit. A perfect mark is six.

Official results gave the Rodnina-Zaitsev couple the championship with nine ordinals and 423.90 points overall.

Smirnova and Ulanov had 18 ordinals and 416.20 points while the East German bronze medallists had 29 ordinals and 409.80 points.

Sandra and Val Bezic of Toronto almost reached their goal of finishing fifth, settling for sixth with 51 ordinals and 399.80 points.

Marian Murray of Vancouver and Glenn Moore of Salmon Arm, finished a strong ninth with 80 ordinals and 386 points. This is their first world championship and they'd aimed only at making the top 10.

His Lucky Numbers Click for $25,176

WINDSOR, Ont. (CP) — Radclyffe G. Bunnett of Chatham, said Wednesday "I'm strictly a longshot player" after winning $25,176.70 for a $2 bet on the fourth race quadactor at Windsor Raceway.

Bunnett, the only winner in the pool, cashed in after correctly selecting the order in which the first four horses finished.

The fourth-race winner, Perfect Dream, went off at 14-to-1 odds; Iowa Thrift (56-to-1) was second; Jim Jingles (3-to-1) third; and My J T (16-to-1) fourth.

Bunnett's correct combination of entry numbers was 5-8-4-7 and he said: "I consider these my lucky numbers."

"I usually play a combination of these numbers although not in any special order," said the 42-year-old mortgage broker. "It doesn't make any difference to me whether the horses are favorites or outsiders."

Bunnett tipped raceway cashier Patricia Westrop $50, then invited all the ticket sellers and cashiers out to dinner.

The record quadactor at the Windsor track was $28,025.10 collected last Nov. 29 by an unidentified Detroit woman.

Mt. Douglas Ramblers are defending champions in this weekend's Vancouver Island High School Girls' basketball tournament at Cowichan High School in Duncan.

Ramblers won the Victoria High School league championship with a 13-1 record and is top-seeded among the four Victoria teams in the eight-team, two-day tourney which starts Friday. Belmont is seeded second, Oak Bay third and Reynolds fourth in the South Island zone.

Port Alberni is ranked first in the Mid-North Island zone, host Cowichan is second rated, Campbell River is third and Courtenay Towwettes are fourth in the seedings.

Ramblers will meet Towettes, Belmont plays Campbell River, Oak Bay tackles Cowichan and Port Alberni meets Reynolds in the first round.

In the final game of the season Wednesday, Mount View downed visiting Claremont, 36-29, to finish in a fifth-place tie with Esquimalt Dockettes. Gail Gummer led the winners with 12 points and Alana Gallagher also had 12 for Claremont.

Victoria High Titans forged to the top of the Victoria High School Rugby League, Wednesday, thanks in part to Oak Bay Bays.

Titans maintained their unbeaten record by crushing the visiting Mount View Hornets, 27-3, for their fourth win in five starts. Their other game finished in a tie.

At Oak Bay, the Bays trimmed previously-unbeaten Claremont Spartans, 10-6, to move into second spot. Spartans dropped to third.

Inside-centre Bernie Crump was the leader for Titans, scoring three tries. Kicker Ron Songhurst contributed a try, penalty goal and two conversions. Titans held a 13-0 edge at the half over the fifth-place Hornets.

At Oak Bay, forward John Willow plunged over for a try with about 5 minutes remaining to snap a 6-6 tie. The teams had traded penalty goals to that point, Don Carson kicking two for the Bays and Dave Chambers a pair for Claremont, the defending league champions.

At Mount Douglas, Brock Coupar scored three tries and kicked two conversions for the Mountainmen, who held a 14-6 lead at the half.

City Women Help Canada

Canada, on two goals by Jenny John of Victoria and one by Diane Whittingham, another Victorian, beat North Wales, 3-1, to end their nine-game tour on a happy note. The team lost its first eight games.

Player Representatives Accept New Agreement

MIAMI (AP) — Major-league baseball players representatives accepted Wednesday a new three-year agreement calling for salary arbitration and the mandatory consent of veteran players before they are traded or sent to the minors.

All 22 representatives at the special meeting voted for acceptance. Two were not present — Oakland and Baltimore representatives.

"I think all the players will be very happy with all the details," said Minnesota Twins' pitcher Jim Perry.

He echoed the opinion of Marvin Miller that the contract negotiated Sunday in New York would easily get the simple majority approval necessary from American and National League players.

The 24 club owners must also accept the proposal.

Expos Swap

Righthander Carl Morton, obtained by the Expos in the expansion draft and national League rookie of the year in 1970, was traded Wednesday by Montreal to Atlanta Braves from whom he was obtained. In a straight trade, the Expos received Pat Jarvis, also a righthanded pitcher. Morton, 29, had a three-season record of 35-45. Jarvis, 31, won 33 games and had 72 defeats in seven seasons with the Braves.

James Bay Tops Saxons

James Bay moved into second place in the Victoria Rugby Union's second division Tuesday by downing University of Victoria Saxons, 12-6, at Gordon Head.

Mike Kirby's try and a convert by Barry Robbins 15 minutes before the end snapped a 6-6, halftime tie. Robbins kicked two penalty goals in the first half. Dave Krochminski booted two penalty goals to account for all the points for Saxons.

Sale of Olympic Coins Will Start This Year

MONTREAL (CP) — Two Olympic commemorative $5 silver coins and two $10 silver coins will go on public sale in October or early November.

Gerry Snyder, vice-president of finance for the Organizing Committee of the 1976 Summer Olympics, said this week the designs for the two coins will be ready by May or June. They will be produced by the federal mint.

Snyder said the initial series will comprise three million each of the two different $5 coins and 1.5 $1.5 million each of the two $10 demoninations.

Between now and 1976, Canada will mint 60 million $5 and $10 silver commemorative coins in 30 different designs, Snyder added.

Snyder said he is confident the target of $250 million profit from the sale of these coins to supply the major part of the $310 million budget for the Games will be met easily.

the profit from the sale of these coins has been a bone of contention between the Montreal Organizing Committee and the federal government.

The Montreal group claims it can realize $250 million of its over-all $310 million budget from such sales, while Ottawa sources claim $100 million will be raised.

Sales of the coins to the Canadian public will be through the chartered banks, not through commercial coin dealers, who will have to buy their coins on the same basis as other citizens.

To launch the Canadian sales, the Canadian mint will make available its mailing list of 160,000 coin collectors, who can be relied on to buy at least one copy of each coin issued, Snyder said.

The extent of the worldwide market could be judged from the fact the United States mint list has close to six million names.

"We intend to sell only between 25 and 30 per cent of the coins in Canada and to sell the rest of them all over the world," Snyder said.

Germany had sold 100 million Olympic commemorative 10-mark coins, 99.5 per cent of them within Germany. Today these coins are selling for 40 marks, or four times their face value, he added.

Details of the Olympic commemorative stamps were still being worked out with post office officials. These stamps would be issued in many denominations and might bear a special Olympic surcharge.

As for the third proposed means of earning money — an Olympic lottery — Snyder said: "We're involved with the provincial government in making arrangements with the other provinces to sell Olympic lottery tickets across Canada."

Federal Approval of Lottery For Olympics Still Problem

OTTAWA (CP) — The question of how to give legal approval to a fund-raising lottery for the 1976 Montreal olympics still is unsolved, Justice Minister Otto Lang said Wednesday.

"Some options might require a change in the law," he said in an interview.

Earlier Wednesday, the Olympics commissioner-general, Roger Rousseau of Montreal, said here that the organizing committee has "run into some difficulties" in its efforts to get federal authorization for the lottery.

Such a lottery could be authorized either by the federal government or by the provinces individually and Ottawa wants to take the provincial option, Rousseau said.

Lang, denying that the federal government is dragging its feet, said there are many legal complications.

He declined to say whether he feels the lottery should be handled by the federal government or through the provinces individually.

Crofton Curlers Dominate Event

Rinks from the Crofton division dominated the 10th annual B.C. Forest Products bonspiel, which was held at the Playland Curling Club over the weekend.

Crofton rinks won two of the three events, provided two losing finalists and had three losing semi-finalists.

Monzon Shot

SANTA FE, Argentina (AP) — Carlos Monzon, world middleweight boxing champion, was shot twice, but not seriously injured during an argument with his wife in the family home, local sources reported Tuesday.

Monzon's manager, Amilcar Brusa, said the boxer was resting at his house and added "nothing serious happened." Monzon refused to talk to reporters.

American Symbol Thrives in B.C.

VANCOUVER (UPI) — The national symbol of the United States, the bald eagle, appears alive and well and living in B.C.

On a recent excursion into the Squamish River valley, about 50 miles from here, more than 50 bald eagles — an endangered species in the U.S. — were spotted. Dozens more have been sighted along the nearby Harrison River by B.C. wildlife officials.

G. A. West, Vancouver regional director of the fish and wildlife branch said "almost every major salmon river system (in British Columbia) has a major population of bald eagles."

He said that although no recent census has been conducted, estimates on the number of bald eagles living in the province went into the thousands.

Man Can Farm Seas and Rivers

Continental Shelves Suited to Aquaculture

By PETER TONGE
Colonist-Monitor Service

One hundred tons of seafood from just one acre of ocean. That's the potential of farming good estuary areas. By comparison, one acre of top-quality pasture can produce 100 pounds of beef; under optimum conditions perhaps 250 pounds. In any event, the ratio heavily favors the sea.

Hence a growing cry to farm our seas and rivers rather than just hunt them.

Experts involved in marine research agree. But they caution against too much optimism. aquaculture, they warn, is unlikely to solve the world's food-supply problems all on its own. Just as only a small percentage of the land area is suitable for agriculture, not much of the seabed is suited to aquaculture.

For the foreseeable future, they point out, only the continental shelf areas, about 3 per cent of the ocean, would be feasilbe for this type of farming venture. Still they insist that controlled fish and shellfish rearing can make a much more significant contribution to mankind's food requirements in the future.

Take the mussel, for example. Right now it's the champion meat producer of them all. According to C. P. Idyll, who heads fishery sciences at the University of Miami, an ecologically suitable area the size of New York's Long Island could produce three times as much mussel meat in a year as the entire world's present fish catch. That's over 230 million metric tons.

The Spaniards raise mussels in vast beds in the Bay of Biscay. French operations off the coast of Brittany are significant producers too. And all over Europe people relish this cousin to the clam.

Over on the far side of the Pacific Ocean the Japanese achieve similarly impressive results with oysters and are very advanced in experiments with scallops. The Chinese raise several species of freshwater fish, principally carp. On Taiwan, farmers display an efficiency in raising milkfish, a saltwater species, which has earned them worldwide recognition and respect.

In the United States, the catfish is the principal farmed eating fish, although trout is also big, and pen-produced salmon is on the increase. and on the Isle of Man the British lead the world in flounder farming.

Other peoples with active aquaculture programs include the Russians, Koreans, and Israelis whose pond-raised fish are frequently a major crop of the Kibbutz.

Despite these and other efforts, the surface of aquaculture has "barely been scratched," say marine biologists, many of whom work on a "shoestring" budget. John Hughes, whose work at the Massachusetts State Lobster Hatchery on Martha's Vineyard has made lobster farming a probability, has just $4,000 a year, exclusive of salaries, to work with.

The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations estimates that, even with present technology, production by aquaculture could increase the present annual harvest from the seas three to five times. With great knowledge it could increase 15 to 20 times.

Says Dr. John H. Ryther of the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution: "If man can walk on the moon he can accomplish virtually anything. Give us (marine biologists) the money and we'll accomplish similarly great things."

On Martha's Vineyard, just a 20-minute ferry ride from the mainland, Hughes raises lobsters — exquisite powder blue and orange-red creatures along with the standard variety.

More important though is the recent breakthrough which has boosted lobster growth fourfold. In effect commercial lobster rearing now is a practical possibility.

Put another way, the "great Eastern American lobster famine" so freely predicted as beginning in the next decade should not come about. Lobster, selling in the more exclusive resaurants at better than $17 a plate, should be no more expensive than steak.

Twenty-two years of experimentation inside the two gray-shingled sheds that make up the Massachusets State Lobster Hatchery has brought this about.

Stated very simply, warm water is the key. In standard sea temperatures of the northeast American coast, lobster take between seven and 11 years to reach one pound in weight. In his hatchery Hughes has this down to two years and, in somecases, to a mere 18 months.

Mating to hatching, once a two-year process, has been trimmed to 11 months. another plus for warm water; A lobster needs only four pounds of food for a body-weight gain of one pound. In the cold waters of the Labrador current that ratio is 11 to 1.

Thus, as Hughes expresses it: "We have the biology (for commercial raising) in the palm of our hand. It's a design and engineering job from now on." By this he means that the need is to develop an efficient system that will automatically feed the lobsters, handle waste removal, control water temperature, and so forth.

These oysters grow twice as fast

Selecting the supergrower for breeding purposes is a relatively simple task. Thus Hughes expects still faster growing rates and more efficient food-conversion ratios in future. He's looking for other characteristics too.

Commercial lobster raising, for the present, will require separate pens for each lobster because of a tendency to cannibalism. But Hughes believes he can breed docility into the lobster as well as impressive growth rates. such a breed could be housed safely in communal pools.

The hatchery, meanwhile, is breeding lobsters with two crusher claws. The crusher claw is much heavier and meatier than the cutting claw. "It's a slow job but it's coming along," says Hughes. Ultimately, though, he hopes to breed claws right out of the lobster. "There is more meat per pound of lobster in those individuals occasionally found in nature without claws (than in normal specimens)," he points out.

When it was placed here in Buzzards Bay some 2½ years ago, it had appeared empty except for a series of strings suspended from the top. Now fully developed oysters cling so densely to these same strings that, from a distance, the frame, or rack as it's called, looks like a solid cube.

This is three-dimensional oyster rearing, the method which some enthusiasts suggest will place this delectable shellfish on the average American's menu as frequently as it graced his forebears' tables in previous centuries.

A drastic falloff in supplies, not a sudden distaste for the delicacy, accounts for the oyster's decline. Drained marshes, filled estuaries, dredged harbors, man-made shorelines, silted and polluted waters have cut into natural supplies. There are fewer and fewer places for the oysters to grow.

Storms, such as the one which buried half the oyster crop in Long Island Sound in 1950 and the 1966 hurricane which cut Gulf of Mexico production by half, contributed to the decline. Starfish and a snail known as the oyster drill, the only natural predators of the oyster, are not the prime culprits.

Under the suspension method of oyster rearing, storms and predators present few problems. Silt stirred up by a storm falls harmlessly off the oyster into the seabed below. Starfish and drills can gather in their thousands below but do no more than "look up" longingly.

Aqua Dynamics, the Cape Cod company which has leased 90 acres of seabed here, gets better than 90 per cent survival of its oyster crop. After several years of experimentation, the company now is moving into full-scale production.

It finds that oyster growth rate is doubled by this suspension method — 2.5 years for a good-sized oyster against 5 to 6 years for oysters raised on the seabed. The algae on which oysters feed are more readily available nearer the surface, it seems. Flavor and quality are excellent. For some reason the shells are thinner too, making shucking a simple matter, even for the amateur. This also means more meat per pound of oysters. Obviously, too, more of the shellfish can be raised in a given area by this method.

When Aqua Dynamics places one of its seeded frames in the water, it weighs around 500 pounds. When raised 2.5 years later, it has 10 times that weight because of the mature oysters. That's 4,500 pounds of oysters from a 10-foot by 7-foot by 5-foot volume of the sea.

The Japanese worked out this superior method of oyster production back in the 1930's and promptly raised their output tenfold in a given area. They now get up to 46,000 pounds of oyster meat a year for every acre under production.

It has been estimated that if Japanese success with the oyster was duplicated on just one per cent of the world's continental-shelf areas, the meat production would be enough to satisfy the entire world's estimated requirements for the year 2,000.

Another estimate suggests that, if two per cent of Washington State's Puget Sound were similarly cultivated, U.S. seafood production would double.

A couple of years ago, John E. McLemore was sketching a gasoline ad but his thoughts were elsewhere. He was thinking of fish — specifically catfish.

As an art student at Sam Houston University, he was preparing for a career in advertising. But increasingly the idea of raising "fat cats" had greater appeal.

Although he didn't know it at the time, he was just one of thousands of newcomers being attracted to catfish farming. The infant industry was about to embark on an explosive growth that would see production of dressed fish climb from a little over one million pounds in 1970 to 12 million in 1972.

That night the young Texan phoned his parents. Could he turn the family's 400-acre mountain ranch in Oklahoma into a fish farm? "Yes," came the reply.

The ranch was to have been the retirement home for McLemore's parents. Instead, it became the Kiamichi Fish Farm, a relatively small but successful operation.

Pioneers pushing westward across the U.S. discovered the tasty catfish in almost every river they crossed. But, although popular as an eating fish right from the start, it was not until 1960 that the "cat" appeared in farm ponds, whereas bass and trout had long been known.

Mars Emerges as 'New World'

Life Forms Possible on Planets

By PETER MOSLEY
Reuter Science Editor

LONDON (Reuter) — Don't expect little green men, but there are growing reasons to believe that some form of life is possible on or near at least three of the planets in the solar system.

It seems only yesterday that scientists were busy dashing any hopes that Earth might not be some unique freak of cosmic evolution. The moon was delcared dead — and always had been as far as life forms were concerned. The Apollo moon missions had shown that.

The inner planets were too hot and the outer planets too cold, and years of patient tuning in to the sundry sounds and signals of the universe had produced no sign of an alien intelligence.

But now comes news that Earth's planetary neighbor, Mars, might well have supported life at some stage and may sustain it again in some distant future when its eccentric orbit swings it closer to the sun.

There is also speculation that some forms of life may exist today on Titan, one of the 10 moons of Saturn, and that the seething planet Jupiter could harbor life in its atmosphere, even if its surface is still a bubbling cauldron.

It is only in the last few months that Mars had emerged as a "new world." For the scientists, the story has turned full circle.

An American space vehicle took a long, hard stare at its "canals" and color-changing "seasons" and that the scientists concluded that the Martian environment was almost certainly too harsh to nurture even the hardiest organisms, let alone plants and people.

When the American Mariner IX probe arrived there in November, 1971, to become the first man-made object to orbit another planet, it found a tremendous dust storm enveloping almost the entire Martian globe.

Slowly the red dust cleared and the Mariner cameras began mapping at least 70 per cent of the surface, while scientific sensors took the planet's temperature and analyzed its thin atmosphere.

Only in recent weeks have the results of that long examination, which lasted almost a year, begun to emerge. They turn out to be sensational. The hottest news is that all the evidence indicates water once flowed freely on the planet's surface and may still be trapped beneath it as permafrost.

And water, on earth, was the essential precursor of life.

Mariner scientists announced in Washington that their sounding indicated there is enough water under the north polar cap of Mars to produce an atmosphere as dense as earth's, if there were a way to release it.

Present-day Mars is far too cold for water to flow and is 1,0000 times drier than the Sahara. But the water is there, locked up ahd waiting. And there is ozone in the atmosphere, another catalyst of life.

Canada Dry Ltd. said the two-cent deposit on six, 10-and 12-ounce returnable bottles will be increased to five cents and the five-cent deposit on 28-and 30-ounce bottles will be increased to 10 cents.

E. B. Walker, Canada Dry vice-president, said the new deposits are intended to attract the child "who might not have bothered for 12 cents, but will bring in one of our cartons if he can get 30 cents."

The increased deposits are effective in the Toronto-London-Hamilton area and will eventually spread across the country. The new deposits are already in effect in some other parts of Ontario, British Columbia and Alberta.

Hong Kong's Golden Seven

Blind Seer Fashionable

By ROBERT ELEGANT from Hong Kong
Colonist-Los Angeles Times Service

The tall blonde glanced around furtively before darting up a flight of steep stairs. She rapped nervously on a narrow door and was admitted by a dirty 12-year-old girl to a scene from a low-budget television director's dreams of oriental intrigue.

No, an enterprise at once more commonplace and more mysterious. The young Englishwoman was enthralled by an art which daily relieves her Chinese sisters and brothers (mostly the sisters) of thousands of dollars — returning entertainment, faith and hope.

He is blind like many soothsayers, because "one who cannot see the outer form can see into men's souls!" Besides, as many faithful clients say, characteristically combining cheerful cynicism and abject superstition, "It's a good job for a blind man. What else can he do?"

To Golden Seven come movie stars and tycoons, young girls and old men, rich and poor — all anxious to read the future. Surrounded by the tools of his trade — most important the atmosphere of mystery — Golden Seven consults sacred books of divination, helped by a sighted assistant when memory fails, and rattles ancient coins in a hollow tortoise shell.

Not only ordinary men and women depend on soothsayers. Hardly a statesman from Korea to India makes a major decision without consulting his personal diviner. Even the Chinese communists, aggressively anti-superstitious, tolerated soothsayers for years, calling them "philosophers of the people's fate."

Today soothsayers still practice clandestinely in China.

They draw many clients from "backward elements" — and those not so backward. A nation which practices no formal religion is obsessed by fate. For some in China and many in Hong Kong, the soothsayer is priest and father confessor.

Golden Seven exercises almost dictatorial power over his clients. He told a highly intelligent, westernized editor who had fallen on bad times that he must trim his fashionably low locks to a stubble crew-cut.

The editor ecstatically reports: "Within weeks, I got a highly advantageous new offer, and a few weeks later, a great outside writing deal."

Golden Seven and his competitors will have more business than they can handle during the next few weeks. The Chinese lunar new year fell last weekend, a most auspicious time for good predictions. Any time around the most important holiday is highly favorable.

Fees range from 36 cents for answering a single question to $21.43 for the full treatment, including a second session the next day when the master has duly pondered the full intricacies of fate.

The Englishwoman was told that she had been a dog in her last incarnation. Her catty acquaintances made the appropriate comments, while her friends reflected that the Golden Seven could not have known she kept six dogs, ranging from a St. Bernard to a miniature poodle.

Those soothsayers who are right often enough acquire tremendous reputations — like Golden Seven's. Another is presently the rage because, rumor has it, an illiterate amah or maidservant ran the U.S. equivalent of $178.57 up to $35,714.24 on the super-heated Hong Kong stock exchange under his guidance.

Some communist leaders have certainly consulted soothsayers. The emperors, their predecessors, did so regularly. As chief priest of the unstructured state religion, the emperior presided over rituals which included divination.

Soothsayers also explain the primacy of Chairman Mao Tse-tung, the successor to the Manchus after the troubled interregnum of the Chinese Republic.

It is written: "A man born with a face that resembles a woman's will be master of the land."

Mao, the soothsayers point out, is in his old age almost indistinguishable from photographs of Tsu Hsi, the empress dowager who was the last effective ruler of the Manchu dynasty. Her soul, they say, migrated into Mao's body to wreak vengeance on the foreigners who had driven her from the Imperial City and exploited the nation.

Immigrants Need Ombudsman–Report

QUEBEC (CP) — The Quebec government should appoint a special ombudsman to protect the rights of immigrants, says the Gendron commission report on language.

It further recommends that the province have its own human rights charter and a permanent human rights commission to guard against all forms of discrimination and violation of the charter.

These safeguards are the basic recommendations of the long-awaited report's third volume, tabled in the Quebec national assembly Tuesday.

The first two volumes, also tabled Tuesday, were leaked earlier to Montreal Le Devoir.

The third volume centres on immigration, a touchy topic to many in the province who feel immigrants are encouraged to assimilate into the English-Quebec community, thus threatening the majority position of French-Quebecers.

Victoria Symphony Society is pleased with the way this season's program is going but, far from being content to rest on whatever laurels there be, it is pondering ways to improve in the future.

To this end, society directors will attend a "think-tank" Saturday and Sunday, March 24 and 25, at the Village Green hotel in Duncan.

There, in a combination of small, round-table talks and open discussion, they will look deeply into a number of vital points. They will eye, for example, the whole purpose of the society; how it may best serve the community and all of Vancouver Island; how it fits into the development plans of the Victoria Conservatory of Music and University of Victoria.

Symphony To Discuss New Roles

To this end, society directors will attend a "think-tank" Saturday and Sunday, March 24 and 25, at the Village Green hotel in Duncan.

□

Directors were told that symphony orchestra concertmaster Derek Collier will be leaving here in mid-March. His three-way appointment, including work with the conservatory and UVic, has been terminated.

Until the end of this season, Steven Staryk of the orchestra's violin section will be acting concertmaster. Meanwhile, the society will advertise across Canada and abroad for a successor.

Something unusual in the way of dance companies will appear Monday, March 26, at the Royal Theatre. This is the Senegalese National Dance Company whose director, Maurice Senghor, travelled throughout Senegal to find the 42 performers.

Dancers include acrobatics

From more than 200 villages he selected the dancers, singers and musicians who since have performed throughout Europe and South America prior to touring the United States. Their program is a lively depiction of the ways of life of the Senegalese people.

Some months ago I wrote of the young Victorians who had gone out from this city to make their way in professional theatre.

One of them, Nancy Watt, was in an hour-long television show last Sunday over CBC from Toronto. Today, to avoid name duplication in Actors' Equity, she uses the name Kathryn Watt, and was the near-victim of Barry Morse as Sweeney Todd, the Demon Barber of Fleet Street, in the melodrama series Purple Playhouse.

The theatres and concert halls of Greater Victoria continue to bustle.

Also tonight, at the McPherson Playhouse, there will be a free public concert by the Purcell String Quartet of Vancouver, in a program sponsored by CBC and recorded for broadcast on CBC-FM Monday, March 19.

Friday sees the opening of the final weekend of Phoenix Festial at UVic, with readings, a scene from Sophocles' Electra, and music each of the three evenings.

Still on Friday is the third in the Provincial Museum series Heritage Court Presents — this time with geologist Jack Souther talking about and showing slides of one of B.C.'s newest provincial parks, Mt. Edziza in the far northwest.

On the same night UVic's department of music presents a degree recital on the flute by Lanny Pollet, assisted by pianist Winifred Scott, in the MacLaurin Auditorium.

Saturday and Sunday evening at the McPherson, the Greater Vancouver Operatic Society brings to Victoria the ever-popular operetta, The Mikado — and word is seats are already almost impossible to obtain.

At 2:30 p.m. Sunday, there is music in two places.

The symphony orchestra will play at the Royal with guest conductor Herrera de la Fuente, conductor of the National Symphony Orchestra of Mexico. The concert will be repeated at 8:30 p.m. Monday.

At the McPherson Sunday afternoon the fine young voices of the Summer Singers, directed by Don Kyle, will be heard in concert.

Barrett's Estimates Pass: 13 Hours Debate

Premier Barrett's salary was approved by the Legislature Wednesday afternoon after more than 13 hours of debate on his estimates.

The house approved the estimates for the premier's office, a total of $156,166, at 4:32 p.m. Wednesday, then quickly moved to approve the estimates for the finance department, a total of $30.4 million, within the next 40 minutes.

Debate on the premier's estimates, which had spread over three days, concluded with a 2½-hour session Wednesday afternoon in which a wide range of subjects were touched upon.

Among other things, the premier:

● Repeated his promise that there would be redistribution before another provincial election, and that it would be done "on as dispassionate an basis as possible," rather than to help the government party.

● Promised that legislation would be introduced so that native Indians on reserves would be eligible for home-acquisition grants, and that this provision would be retroactive.

● Promised he would give his support to proposals from the Peace River-Liard area that the area be designated one of regional economic expansion by the federal government.

● Said he didn't believe in a separate department of urban affairs, but preferred to keep both city and rural areas under one municipal affairs department.

Barrett also told the house that former Liberal cabinet minister Eric Kierans had not been hired by the government in any capacity, and although he'd been used as a consultant in the industrial development field, he hadn't yet submitted a bill.

He himself had never met Kierans, the premier said.

He made the statement in reply to questions from James Chabot (SC—Columbia River) who expressed concern about comments Kierans had been reported as making that the Manitoba government should assume public control over all mining in that province over the next 10 years.

It was obvious, Chabot told Barrett that Kierans' philosophy "was much like yours," and he feared that the former Liberal communications minister would soon be making similar recommendations for B.C.

Barrett didn't answer a question from Chabot on whether he'd support public takeover of B.C. mines, but Mines Minster Leo Nimsick called across the floor of the house, "Yes."

Also during the debate, Alex Fraser (SC—Cariboo) urged that government offices remain open during the lunch hour for the convenience of members of the public, who find it very difficult to get to the offices during working hours.

He knew that the government had previously said that it was inconvenient for staff to work through the lunch hour, but he thought that inconvenience was outweighed by the greater inconvenience to the public of having the offices closed. The offices are now closed from noon to 1:10 p.m. each day.

In debate on a grant of $3.5 million for payment of elderly citizen renters' grants, Pat Jordan (SC—Okanagan North) urged that the payment be increased from $50 a year to $100 a year, when there was such a shortage of apartments to rent.

After all the finance department estimates were passed, the house began debate on the estimates of Agriculture Minster David Stupich. This will continue when the Legislature resumes at 2 p.m. today.

Reporter's Tribute to Witt

Never in Bad Mood

By HUBERT BEYER
Colonist Reporter

As a reporter covering the city hall beat you spend half your working hours with municipal politicians, but it isn't very often you come across one like Ove Witt.

One day, shortly after his election as alderman, I was waiting for the city hall elevator to take me up to the second floor when this voice boomed behind me:

"What the hell do think you're doing taking an elevator?" It was Witt grinning at me, prodding me into exercise. I ended up walking up the stairs that day.

Witt was one of the few people I have known who was never in a bad mood, even when things didn't go his way.

I remember one particular council meeting when Witt tried to make some point but was trounced by other aldermen who relied heavily on the use of polished political phrases.

He rose again, announced that he was neither a Yale graduate, nor was he willing to "talk a bunch of nonsense," but he knew when he was right.

Witt made his point.

He never was a politician in the usual sense of the word. He was just a man who felt that he could do some good for the comunity. For that reason, he never felt quite at home during debates about the possible social consequences of some proposal.

Witt liked children and he didn't like what some people said about them. The best quote I ever got from Ove regarding children was during an impromptu interview on his plans to provide more recreational facilities for youngsters.

"Kids want love, joy, bread, freedom and peace. Is that too much?" he asked.

City hall was a pretty quiet place Wednesday. But the respect people there showed for Ove wasn't just the kind of respect one pays to someone who has died.

You could have asked anyone about him the day before, or the month before and you wouldn't have been able to find anyone who had something bad to say about him.

He was just that kind of guy.

While he was recuperating from his operation, Witt phoned me about a week ago. We talked about politics and politicians, and Witt said jokingly, "If you ever write my obituary, I hope you say just good things about me."

Victoria Refuses to Sell to B.C. Tel

B.C. Tel has offered Victoria $100,000 for a parcel of land on top of Smith's Hill, near the Saanich boundary, but the city doesn't want to sell.

Instead, the zoning committee recommended Tuesday that city council offer B.C. Tel a 40-year lease on the land.

The telephone company's offer comes to $20 a square-foot which is the price of prime commercial land in downtown Victoria, but the aldermen don't want to sell the property because it's located in the middle of the city's newest park.

B.C. Tel wants to install a microwave tower on the property and was willing to pay the price for the land because it's on top of a hill. This means that the tower will not have to be built too high.

The committee recommended that B.C. Tel pay an annual rent of $5,000 for the property. The lease would be subject to renewal every five years at which time the rent could be adjusted.

Done Up Like a Dog's Dinner? Not Insulting

NEW YORK (Reuter) — A lawyer who divides his practice equally between the United States and Britain has published a book which might save an American from feeling insulted when his British friend inquires why he's "all done up like a dog's dinner."

The book, entitled British Self Taught With Comments in American, defines "like a dog's dinner colloquial" as "dolled up."

Norman Schur, a lawyer in the U.S., solicitor when plying his trade in London, has compiled more than 5,000 such "Briticisms" over the last six years. Far from being a dull tome, his illustrated dictionary follows in the best tradition of Dr. Samuel Johnson's great dictionary, a tradition which allows for considerable editorial comment.

Schur tells his readers, for instance, that "martini," the ubiquitous American cocktail of gin and vermouth, if ordered in a British pub — "bar," translates Schur — will summon a glass of straight vermouth.

"Whether it is dry or sweet will depend upon chance, but in either event it will be warm," Schur writes.

"A gin and it (it being an abbreviation for Italian vermouth) still is occasionally ordered and shouldn't be," Schur warns in conclusion.

Schur's book has received high praise in this country, both from the popular reviewers and from linguistic scholars. British Overseas Airways Corp. has purchased a batch of the books, presumably so Americans can study the language before disembarking in London.

A British publisher Johnson and Bacon plans a British edition which will be sold mainly to American tourists at the same shops — a Briticism Schur translates as "stores" — where guides to Westminster Abbey and the Houses of Parliament are sold, and it is expected to be used by Americans in much the same way a Briton disembarking in Dar es Salaam would use a Swahili phrasebook.

The son of an international banker who commanded nearly all Eastern and Western European languages, Schur came by his hobby honestly. He himself admits without shame to having liked Latin and Greek as a schoolboy, and is fluent in French, Italian, German and Spanish — besides British and American.

A 65-year-old energetic reader and raconteur with salt-and-pepper hair and moustache, Schur lives in Connecticut and in a 16th-century cottage in Hawkhurst, Kent, with his American wife Marjorie.

In his search for meaning in the chaos of Anglo-American usages, Schur continues to jot down new words, though his book is out. His publishers, Macmillan, made him stop sending them new words six months ago and since then he has happened across 130 new Briticisms.

Street Survey By Tories

Victoria's young Conservatives will take to the streets this weekend with a public opinion survey on national issues.

About 35 members of the University of Victoria Progressive Conservative Student Federation and of the newly-formed Greater Victoria Young Progressive Conservatives will be stopping passersby in shopping centres and downtown to get the blanks filled on questionnaires.

Questions include a statement of federal and provincial party preferences, and ask for opinions on capital punishment, oil tanker routes, automobile insurance, abortion, anl legalization of marijuana.

Those stopped will also be asked what is the most urgent problem facing Canada.

South Alberta Blacked Out

CALGARY (CP) — One of the biggest power disruptions in Alberta's history blacked out most of the province's southern half Tuesday morning, affecting three-quarters of a million people. Ice knocked out three 240,000-volt power lines which served a 35,000-square-mile area from Red Deer in the north to Lethbridge in the south.

Consumer Week in Canada

This year, "CONSUMER WEEK IN CANADA", is from March 1st to 6th, inclusive. The Consumer Association of Canada, which consists of all voluntary workers, is a non-profit, non-partisan, non-sectarian group involved at all levels — nationally, provincially and locally. The C.A.C. provides consumer information and is the Voice for Consumers, taking consumer opinion to government and industry. Woodward's salutes this hard working organization . . . the watchdog of the Consumer. (For further information, please contact your local C.A.C. chapter.)

Jiffy Chicken Stroganoff with Sour Cream

If you wnt to make your family sit up and take notice next time you serve chicken, try this tasty recipe using dairy sour cream. The flavour is something special, thanks to the tangy flavour and velvety smoothness of the sour cream. (Easy to make too!)

1 (2½ - 3 lb.) broiler-fryer, cut up salt and pepper
3 tbsp. butter
½ cup chopped onion
3 tbsp. flour
¼ tsp. thyme
¼ tsp. salt
3 chicken bouillon cubes
1⅔ cups boiling water
1 (5-oz.) can sliced mushrooms
½ pint dairy sour cream
chopped parsley

Sprinkle chicken with salt and pepper. Melt butter in large frying pan and brown chicken on all sides. Cover frying pan and cook chicken over low heat, turning occasionally, 25 minutes or until tender. Remove from frying pan and keep warm. Add onion to drippings; saute until tender. Remove from heat and blend in flour, thyme and the ¼ tsp. salt. Dissolve bouillon cubes in boiling water and gradually add to flour mixture. Stir in undrained mushrooms and cook over medium heat, stirring constantly, until smoothly thickened. Stir in sour cream and heat gently. Pour over chicken and sprinkle with parsley. Serve immediately. Make 4 servings.

Discrimination On UBC Campus:

Women's Loyalty Frustrates Efforts at Forming Union

By KATHRYN HAZEL
Colonist Reporter

Women are discriminated against as employees and students at the University of British Columbia, and it will take a massive change in attitude before this discrimination is abolished, says Shelagh Day.

Speaking at a meeting sponsored by the University of Victoria Women's Action Group Wednesday afternoon, Ms. Day who wrote and prepared a report on discrimination against women at UBC released in January outlined the obstacles to women in the university.

About 60 women and one man listened as she described how women are paid less than men in every academic rank, are given lower ranks than men even when they have the same qualifications, and are a small proportion of the UBC faculty.

She also told how women staff get paid less for the work they do, occupy fewer supervisory and administrative positions than men, and why fewer women receive university educations and do not go as far as men do at UBC.

As far as salary differentials between men and women faculty members go, ranging from $1740 to $3071, she said, "money serves as a way of indicating a much deeper attitude towards women.

"No matter what rank you're at, it doesn't change the fact that women are discriminated against in pay. In other words, you can't win, even if you have all the right things that in the academic world make for success."

About 22 per cent of the women in the faculty are on one-year contracts, she said, "which to me explains why there has been such an enormous silence up to now. When you're on a one-year contract, you don't have much security."

Women staff members, on the average, earn approximately $1740 less yearly than men. Of the women staff members 650 earn less than $450 a month, which, if they are supporting a family as many working women do, would put them below the poverty line, she explained.

'My feeling is we'll get equal pay first'

"If you are a woman you do women's work and get paid less," she said. Unions weren't much help, either — the pay differential between men and women was even higher for those belonging to unions.

As a result women at UBC were trying to form their own union, which was difficult because "women have been trained to be loyal, and the university is such a sweet paternalistic employer.

The worst job category for women to be in at the university was one called miscellaneous, she said. "If you get dumped in miscellaneous, the salary differential takes jumps up to $200 a month."

Even in mixed work categories, women lose out." The women who are doing men's work are always at the lowest level — the men who do women's work are always at the highest level."

Shelagh Day

There wasn't much information available on students, and what there was is scattered throughout the university in different departments and offices.

Two facts were clear, however; most women students were concentrated in the arts, education and science faculties, as well as the school of nursing, and, said Ms. Day, "there is a fantastic drop-off for women in the various faculties as they go along."

The reason for this was the model of the ideal student, on which universities are based, is male — that is, someone who studies fulltime and can devote an extended period of time to learning. Women need more flexibility.

"In our society the years allotted to university education are ages 18 to 26 — which is logical for men, but not for women. These are the years most women have children."

Thus many women find that they must study part-time to complete their education, as they have more demands on their time, but universities do not regard part-time students as serious, she said.

This is indicated, she said, in that part-time students cannot obtain the scholarships, medical services, housing and other benefits available to full-time students.

As for action being taken on her report at the administrative level, the president of UBC, Walter Gage, had appointed a committee to look into the report and make recommendations.

However, she said, "it ain't public," which means that any decisions the committee makes won't be known until it brings out its final report.

"Until that committee says yes, it's (the report) okay, a whole bunch of things will be hung up, such as salary inequities."

Right now the University of Toronto is looking into the problem of salary inequities, "which is just dandy," she explained, because the UBC faculty set their salary requests according to the rates at U of T.

"My feeling is we'll get equal salaries first," she said. Ms. Day added that she would like to see the whole field of women's studies opened up, because it is "a really new, exciting field."

Referring to a UBC faculty member's criticism that nobody would want a degree in women's studies because it would be a second-class degree, she said: "What he doesn't realize is that the university is now giving out degrees in male studies."

Status of Women

Barrett Says B.C. Will Pick Up Cues

B.C. will lose no time in implementing recommendations brought in by the new federal advisory council on the status of women in Canada, Premier Barrett told the legislature Tuesday night.

Responding to a request by Patricia Jordan (SC—North Okanagan) for appointment of a similar body provincially, Barrett said "the last thing we need is another commission on women's rights looking into the same things all over again."

After promising to implement findings of the federal body, the premier added B.C. doesn't need a special women's ministry, which the NDP endorsed at its last convention, because all that is necessary is a government "committed to see there is some equality for women."

What Price Your Privacy? will be the theme of a forum to be sponsored in conjunction with consumer week which begins today.

The meeting to be sponsored by Victoria branch, Consumers' Association of Canada, will be held at 8 p.m. Tuesday in the Saanich-Victoria branch public library, 880 Seymour.

The forum will explore such topics as how confidential is the information you give on your income tax form or motor vehicle licence application; can you be traced from your social security number, and is the city directory an asset.

Panel members will include W. D. Tindall, managing director, Victoria Better Business Bureau; Douglas Gray, lawyer, and Mrs. Leota Mace, consumer.

ABCs Taught One at a Time

Teacher Describes Her Books as Language Packages

By KENNETH G. GEHRET

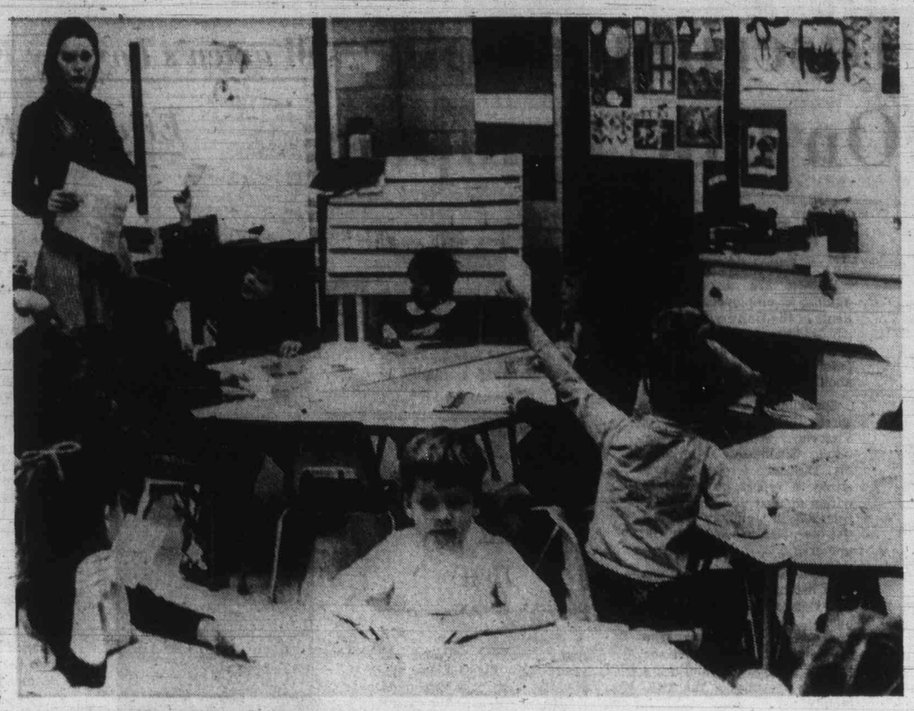
SCITUATE, Mass. — Like many teachers through the years, Pleasant Rowland was dissatisfied with the materials available to her. But unlike most who have felt that way, Miss Rowland decided to do something about the situation.

She wrote a preprimer program and had it published.

Before arriving at this solution, the attractive young woman had taught for 5½ years in different parts of the United States. Although she knew her way around kindergarten and first and second grades, the youngest pupils were her favorites. But she felt "frustrated with the textbooks. With Sesame Street and other exposures, the kids were ready for sounds and letters. They could handle a reading program if it was properly prepared."

Her experience indicated that "Somewhere between kindergarten and first grade the alphabet got lost. Nobody really, truly taught it."

So, after dropping out of the classroom for two years of TV reporting, Miss Rowland set down to work out her teaching frustrations on a series of 24 books entitled, Beginning to Read, Write, and Listen.



Letter O wins hands up in classroom exercise

With a few exceptions, each book is devoted to single letter and only one sound is assigned to that letter, to avoid confusing the youngsters at the outset. The author-educator is now working on the rest of the 44 sounds in the alphabet as part of a first-grade program.

"The usual preprimer has words in it," she comments. "That's premature. This series is broken down into digestible, picturable units. Each book retains the previous letters through a controlled vocabulary."

The series is currently used by an estimated 200,000 pupils across the country, including youngsters in the two kindergartens in this coastal town of Scituate.

Prior to the Christmas vacation, these children were busily learning their first vowel, the short O. "Olive," the teacher said. "Which letter does that begin with?" And the enthusiastic tots held up individual cards bearing the letter O rather than the other one each held, inscribed with C.

C was the first letter learned. Now, the teacher was including some C words, to reinforce what was learned earlier.

The class was working as a unit. This is recommended for the first six letters. After that, individualization shows up as children move ahead at their own speed in a way and to the extent the teacher can manage. High-school students are in each room two afternoons a week, expanding the opportunity for individual attention.

Helen O'Connor, reading chairman for the Scituate district, explains that the local schools tried to put together their own program but acknowledges that "you can't expect every teacher to be proficient that way."

Beginning to Read, Write, and Listen gets around that problem, Mrs. O'Connor points out, by providing material that strengthens a teacher's instruction.

Jacqueline White, the school principal, was impressed with Beginning as a "cohesive program that hit all the elements of interest to us." She also liked the fact that Miss Rowland had been a kindergarten teacher herself.

Mrs. White appraises the program as "setting up a better learning situation" and making possible "learning in a delightful way." Miss Rowland describes her books as a "total language-arts approach; reading, writing, and speaking are integrated."

That means that the visual, auditory, and muscular are presented in one package. Letters that a child can feel are included as are a stylus and "slate" on which he can write and instantly erase his efforts to form letters. There also are tapes so he can gain verbal reinforcement of what the teacher has said. Even a method of forming letters, beginning essentially from a circle, is part of Beginning.

"What we have to show the child is how the abstracts (words) get on paper, what they mean, and that he can do it himself (through handwriting)," Miss Rowland emphasizes. "This is the important thing. There's no need at this point to learn alphabetical order."

She doesn't claim to have discovered new techniques and devices. In fact, she wanted to stay with the familiar to a large extent since one basic consideration was "to create materials teachers could feel comfortable with." So the intent, Miss Rowland declares "was to package traditional ideas and theories in such a way that a child could have success and fun with it, without scaring teachers away."

The vivacious educator sold her program to Boston Education Research Company, which now employs her as vice-president in charge of development. Beginning is published and marketed by Lippincott. The publisher provides teacher orientation for its customers.

Ann Landers

Dear Ann Landers: This is not a very appetizing subject, but I need an answer. Please forgive me for being indelicate, but is it proper to blow one's nose at the table?

I mentioned this to friend who did it several times, and it wasn't just an ordinary blow — she sounded like she was calling a moose three miles away. I gave her a sour look to indicate my disapproval. She asked, belligerently, "When a person has to blow her nose, what is she supposed to do?" I replied, "She can excuse herself from the table and go blow it." It was told in no uncertain terms that it is considered perfectly proper to blow one's nose at the table and that I am wrong. Am I? —Old Shoe

Dear Shoe: It is proper to wipe one's nose at the table, but for blowing, especially the moose call variety, a person should excuse himself.

Dear Ann Landers: My younger sister passed away in May. Mary Joan was only 10 years old when she died — such a pretty, lovely, little girl. It seemed a terrible shame to lose her. Her death was not sudden. We knew for five years that Mary Joan had leukemia.

We are devout Catholics and we live two blocks from the church. Mom is over there praying three times a day. She ordered a large statue of the Blessed Virgin for the grave and it was placed there the day of the funeral. Since then, Mom has placed two more statues at Mary Joan's gravesite and has changed the headstone.

We cannot get her to give away any of Mary Joan's clothes. She wants to keep her bedroom and closet exactly as it was.

I loved my sister very much, but I'm afraid Mom is going to drive herself crazy if she doesn't get her mind on something else. There are four other children who need her attention, but she is completely preoccupied with the child she lost. What can be done? —Not Looking Back

Dear Not Looking: Your mother is understandably grieved, but she must accept the fact that life is for the living. Her priest is the logical person to bring her out of this depression. Speak to him about your mother's obsession and I'm sure he will offer to spend some time with her.

□

Dear Ann Landers: I was disgusted with your answer to Fat and Miserable. You owe an apology to every overweight person in the world. How dare you say, "If you hate what you are — be something different."

Don't you know that many fat people have a glandular problerm — a malfunctioning thyroid? Others inherit their obesity from their parents.

If these unfortunate heavyweights can't live their lives without being thought of as "blobs," or weak-willed, or piggish, something is wrong with our society. — A Teen Who Has Advice For Ann Landers

Dear Teen: Ann Landers says thanks for the "advice" but I have a flash for you. Any physician will tell you that 95 per cent of the heavyweights have no thyroid problem. The "malfunctioning" gland is their mouths. It's overworked. A tendency toward obesity may be inherited, but people who have this inherited tendency need not be fat if they watch their diet and excercise regularly. The real problem is the learned eating habits that children pick up from their parents.

Escape Bid Ends in Jail

BUDAPEST, Hungary (UPI) — A city court sentenced a teen-age boy to 15 years imprisonment for breaking into a girls' school and holding 20 hostages while demanding free passage to the West, newspapers said Saturday.

Laszlo Pintye, 18, along with his brother, held the hostages for five days last month. Police shot to death Pintye's brother. Laszlo Pintye gave himself up.

Horse Trials Cool Romance Rumors

LONDON (CP) — Princess Anne and Lieut. Mark Phillips will be seeing a lot more of each other in the coming weeks, but this doesn't necessarily mean romance is on the boil.

In fact, the word from inside the royal circle is that riding, not romance, is the prime reason why the Queen's 22-year-old daughter and the 24-year-old Olympic horseman spend time together.

Anne and Phillips are both entered in a series of horse trials leading to the Badminton Trials in mid-April from which Britain's riders will be selected for the European championships at Kiev in the Soviet Union in September.

Both are anxious to be selected. Anne, who won the European individual championship in 1971, is to accompany her father, Prince Philip, to Russia that month for the first British royal visit since the 1917 revolution.

Speculation about the relationship between Anne and Mark arose again during the weekend when the princess returned from a 12-day tour of Ethiopia and almos immediately sped off to meet Phillips at his family's home in Wiltshire.

Phillips, meanwhile was on his third weekend leave from his regiment, the First Queen's Dragoon Guards, since it was posted to West Germany a month ago.

A question was even asked in the House of Commons about the frequency of such leaves — though Phillips was not mentioned by name — and drew the bland rejoinder that the Queen's Dragoon Guards had no special privileges.

Phillips, at the Queen's suggestion, is riding Columbus, one of the royal mounts which proved too powerful for Princess Anne. She likely will ride a brown gelding named Goodwill.

Feeding Family of 10:

Go Light on Hamburger, Heavy on the Soya Flour

By JUDY CREIGHTON

Besides airing and drying out the piles of laundry for a family of 10, the dryer is often used to thaw out her baking.

"The only way to keep my baking from being eaten was to freeze it, but the kids have got around that one. They thaw it in the dryer," says humorously.

More seriously Morgan, who two years ago married former Saanich alderman and widower, Bob Ostler in Campbell River and subsequently added another seven children to her family of three, has had to learn to feed her a growing crowd nutritiously and yet appetizingly.

High on her list of priorities is the nutritional content of every meal she serves.

"To feed our family the protein quality of meat would amount to $5 or $6 a meal these days," she says.

"That's why I became interested in Chinese cooking. I need only a half to one pound of meat to feed my family when I am preparing Chinese food."

"From my research, I see the average person needs 70 grams of protein a day. That same protein can be obtained in soya flour, cheese and eggs," she says.

A typical Ostler breakfast (except for weekends when Bob pitches in as gourmet chef) is rolled oats laced with wheat germ. Instead of serving frozen fruit juice, Morgan pulverizes a whole lemon, orange and half cup of sugar in a multi-duty Danish blender

Short three children, the Ostlers sit down to Chinese food

Colonist photos by Alex Barta

Bob bought her for their first wedding anniversary.

Morgan says that without her blender which also grinds meat, kneads bread dough and doubles as a mixer, and her freezer, it would be impossible to keep her monthly food bill below its present $260 to $300 a month.

"If I'm to take advantage of supermarket specials, buying in bulk and in-season produce, to not have the freezer for instance, would be false economy," she says.

This nutrition-watcher favors wheat germ, regards hamburger as 'depressing'

She adds she rarely uses hamburger in her cooking. "For nutrition's sake I would rather use the less expensive organic meats such as chicken livers and kidneys. They're more valuable.

"In fact, I think hamburger is depressing."

Returning to her love for Chinese cuisine, here again she cites high nutritional value.

"The vegetables have to be cooked at a very high temperature for a short time, which naturally retains the vitamins," she says.

Watching her prepare such a meal is awe-inspiring. The night I visited the Ostler home, she was nonchalantly preparing from scratch mushroom egg foo yung, chicken chow mein and steamed rice.

The Ostlers consume 30 loaves of bread a week. To cut down on the cost of milk, Morgan mixes powdered skim with homogenized milk.

She packs no fewer than 35 school lunches a week and has an arrangement with a Royal Oak bakery to get a special discount on anything she buys there.

"I never carry a shopping list when I market on Thursday, but I go over in my mind generally what I'm going to prepare each day during the next week," she says.

"I never impulse-buy or purchase pre-mixed or convenience foods and very rarely will I buy canned goods, as I prefer to make my own soups, freeze fruits in season and purchase fresh produce over tinned."

"But these days, with all the chemical tampering of produce and additives in food, it takes a lot of study and thought to feed a family well," she says.

Morgan wrote out a list of tips on how homemakers can increase food value for their families:

- Freeze vegetable cooking water in blocks as a base for soups, gravy, stews.
- Dredge kidneys, liver, fish in wheat germ before frying.
- Toss a handful of wheat germ in casseroles, baking powder mix, pancakes, meat loaves, breakfast cereals.
- Add a tablespoon of soya flour (high in protein) to cookies, soups, casseroles, milk shakes.
- Always add soya flour or wheat germ at the last moment, as overcooking causes nutrient loss.
- Use low cooking temperatures for steaming or simmering foods.
- Add a few tablespoons of powdered milk to biscuit mix, pancakes, puddings for extra calcium intake.

FISH CAKES

6 large potatoes
1½ lbs. fish
3 eggs
salt and pepper
chopped parsley.

Method: Mash potatoes with milk and butter and eggs. Mix in remaining ingredients. Fry in hot pan and serve with white sauce and tossed salad.

Another recipe she offers is meat and vegetable soup.

3 qts. vegetable water or soup bone stock
2 potatoes, grated
4 carrots, grated
2 cups chopped celery
1 large onion, 1 garlic clove chopped
1 tsp. basil, 1 tsp. crushed bay leaf
1 lb. ground meat, salt and pepper.

Simmer all ingredients gently except meat, for 15 minutes. Turn off heat. Drop crumbled meat into hot broth. Serve immediately with baking powder biscuits.

Order of Amaranth Hands Over $2,000

A lot of hard work by members will change hands in the form of a $2,000 cheque when the 18th grand court session of the Order of the Amaranth in B.C. is held this weekend at the Empress.

The money, raised as the grand court's project for 1972-73, will be turned over to the Heart Foundation.

Theme for the session will be the golden rule; the emblem, praying hands, and the colors, coral and gold.

Mrs. Edgar Wells, grand royal matron, of Victoria, and Lennard Nygren, grand royal patron from Vancouver, will lead the sessions, which will bring members from various parts of Canada, the United States and England.

The order is an international charitable organization open to men and women, founded on a masonic affiliation. During the last 18 years the grand court of B.C. has made sizable contributions to various B.C. projects.

A dinner will be held Friday at the Empress for members and guests, and the two-day business session will end Saturday night with an open installation for the newly-elected 1973-74 grand royal matron, grand royal patron and officers.

Erma Bombeck

I'm bored.

Every day when I take a shower, I wash the left arm first, then the right arm, then my face and neck and work my way down. Every day.

Every week I buy five pounds of hamburger, a chuck roast, two fryers and a package of chops. Every week.

I wind the vacuum sweeper cord counterclockwise in a figure eight . . . always counterclockwise. I never answer the phone on the first ring. I never read my horoscope until after coffee. I say the same dumb thing to the dog everyday, "How's Doggy today?" (He never answers.)

Every day, I call up someone and tell them I look like a cumulus cloud and am going on a diet. (I never do.)

When I wash dishes, I always wash the glasses first. I eat my lunch everyday and watch the "soaps" and mumble, "Who watches these things?"

When I drive the car, I always stick my hand over the passenger seat when I stop suddenly . . . whether there's anyone sitting there or not. I say the same insipid thing to the bank teller everytime I go in, "Giving away any samples today?"

I always put the milk out too soon for dinner, forget to put the salt on the table, throw out the morning paper before anyone gets a chance to read it and can be counted on to say every night when my husband has just fallen asleep, "Did you lock the back door?"

I find myself picking up movie magazines and envying expectant mothers who are not married. Watching Jack LaLanne and secretly wishing someone would put starch in his little blue jumpsuit. Wondering what it is with me that I can't wear false eyelashes without falling asleep at 8:30.

"You don't understand me at all," I said to my husband last night. "I'm in a rut and I'm young. With a few accessories I could be sensuous. I want to live. I want to say shocking words like The Last Tango. I want to do something outrageous, different . . . unpredictable and crazy like give a party on Monday morning, or put the lavender bath tissue in the red bathroom. Can't you understand that?"

"I understand," he said evenly. "It's March again."

U.S. Jobs Lost By Trade Drop

BAL HARBOUR, Fla. (Reuter) — A report by the AFL-CIO's economic policy committee said that the "deterioration of the U.S. foreign trade position" has caused a net loss of perhaps one million job opportunities for American workers in the last six years.

Stowaway Delivered

EDMONTON (CP) — The cat was literally out of the bag when Mrs. Mervin Giles of Edmonton arrived in the maternity case room of the Royal Alexandra Hospital.

And the nurses went wild over the new arrival.

When Mrs. Giles opened her suitcase to get her housecoat, the family's pet tomcat jumped out. Somehow, in the packing rush as the Giles prepared to leave for the hospital, he had stowed away unnoticed in the suitcase.

Tempest in the Toilet Tank

Those Hawaiians Are Real Bricks

HONOLULU (UPI) — Mayor Frank F. Fasi claims he saves three quarts of water every time he flushes his toilet by putting juice bottles in his tank.

State Sen. Donald S. Nishimura, urging that politics be kept "out of the toilet," favors the brick-in-the-tank approach.

A brick versus bottle controversy has erupted in Hawaii over the best way to save millions of gallons of drinkable water that is flushed down island toilets each year.

Nishimura, a Democrat, has introduced a resolution calling on residents to place a brick in their toilets. The legislator claims the program, patterned after a campaign that originated in Cherry Hill, N.J., will save 170 million gallons of water a year if everyone "who owns, rents or uses a toilet" participates.

He says 45.7 billion gallons "of drinkable water gurgle down Hawaii's toilet basins each year."

Fasi feels the use of bricks in toilet tanks is the wrong way to save water. He is using two water-filled juice bottles in his tank.

The mayor says it is an unnecessary expense to buy bricks when there are other objects that work just as well. He utilizes a quart bottle and a half-gallon one.

The brick method, using two bricks per tank, saves about a quart of water each time the toilet if flushed.

Although Hawaii is not in immediate danger of running short of water, the Honolulu board of water supply figures that increased consumption will force it to seek alternative sources beginning in 1990.

The manager of one apartment complex has already decided to install bricks in the tanks of all 602 toilets.

But many residents are just plain confused, and legislators aren't rushing to act on the issue either.

Nishimura's resolution is stopped up in the health committee.

"I hope that something can be done to flush the resolution back onto the senate floor," he says.

B.C. Legislation Most Comprehensive in Country

Some Provinces Control Land Development

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

The era when land speculators could acquire and develop rural land with little fear of government interference apparently is coming to an end in most parts of Canada.

Legislation introduced by the Barrett government in B.C. to establish a land commission to determine land use in that province is the most comprehensive of its kind. But a Cross-Canada survey by The Canadian Press shows that most provincial governments are becoming more involved in controlling land use.

The governments of Prince Edward Island, Quebec and Saskatchewan are buying up agricultural or recreational land in at least some parts of their provinces.

On the same day as plans for the British Columbia commission were announed, the Manitoba government announed plans to buy back recreational land.

The Alberta government announced Tuesday it will establish a three-member forum to hold public hearings and make recommendations on land use regulations.

The Ontario government, while it has no over-all plan for provincial control of land use, has frozen commercial development in one part of the province. And it uses its control over municipalities to prevent changes in land use in those municipalities which do not have master development plans of their own.

He said it would not prevent land-owners from selling their property, but would ensure that land-buyers use it for the purpose designated by the province.

The province also has about $18 million in a special fund to buy greenbelt land, and smaller amounts for parks and land banks.

In the other nine provinces, the government stands on land use control are:

Newfoundland: No legislation similar to British Columbia's is on the books and none is planned, the provincial affairs department says.

Prince Edward Island: The province's Land Development Corp. buys land from farmers going out of business. The land is held for agricultural development or transferred to other uses such as recreation and forestry. However, the province's legislation doesn't zone privately-held land for specific use.

Nova Scotia: Although the government doesn't have land banks, it does make available low-interest loans to people buying farmland. The government is trying to accumulate Crown land for recreational use in the future.

New Brunswick: No legislation similar to British Columbia's is being considered. Land zoning comes under the aegis of the planning advisory board of the province's municipal affairs department, but must be approved by the municipal councils concerned.

Quebec: The government has studied means of preserving land for farms and greenbelts, but has no immediate plans for legislation along that line. There is legislation allowing the government to buy out small farms in some parts of the province, such as Abitibi and Saguenay-Lake St. John.

Ontario: Although local zoning laws still control most land use, the province recently has issued stop orders on uncontrolled building in some townships and has frozen commercial development on the Niagara Escarpment to preserve it for recreation purposes. There are provisions for green-belt areas in a regional plan for the Toronto area.

Manitoba: Last week's speech from the throne said a program will be introduced to buy back recreational land now in private hands for public use.

Saskatchewan: A Land Bank Commission established last year is intended to retain land for agricultural use. No commission similar to British Columbia's is planned or contemplated.

Alberta: three-man forum being appointed by the government will consider land use in regard to the family farm and use of agricultural land for urban expansion. Agriculture Minister Hugh Horner said there are major economic and social factors affecting agricultural land use patterns in Alberta.

Man Jailed Nine Years On Heroin Trafficking

Terming heroin "the most disgusting and degrading drug," Victoria County Court Judge M. L. T. Drake ordered a nine-year prison term Wednesday for a 33-year-old Victoria man who had 25 capsules of heroin for the purpose of trafficking.

The term was imposed against Daniel Arthur Lansall, 1243 Oscar, who had been found guilty Feb. 14 by Drake following a trial on a charge laid after two RCMP drug squad members found 25 capsules in a balloon last Sept. 7.

The discovery was made in bushes near Lansall's former residence in Saanich. He had been seen to throw something in the bushes as soon as he noticed police were watching him.

Drake based his verdict on his belief that the 25 capsules were "more than a simple user is likely to have on him at one time." Lansall had been described as a user of one or two capsules a day.

Before the sentencing, Drake said he was impressed by the evidence of character witnesses but the "main consideration" should be the public interest.

Lansall is due to appear this morning in Victoria Provincial Court on a Victoria charge of criminal negligence causing death in connection with a Jan. 29 traffic accident that resulted in the death of his passenger in a new minibus, Mrs. Caroline Joy Browne, 23, of Valemount, B.C.

A coroner's jury probing the accident ruled Lansall was both negligent and impaired by a drug in his driving.

How To Prune

Yesterday we discussed the job of pruning the roses — the whys and wherefores thereof — and we covered in fair detail how to go about pruning newly planted bushes.

Today, as I promised, we'll have a look at the roses which have been in your garden for a year of more. These are pruned according to their class — whether they are hybrid teas, floribundas, ramblers, etc., and sometimes according to their variety and vigor. Generally speaking, the weaker the growth, the more you cut away.

Use a very sharp knife or a really good pair of secateurs, making sure you get a good clean cut with no bruised or crushed wood or jagged edges. If your secateurs are something less than perfect, finish off by smoothing the cut surface with a knife Don't tug or pull at the bush while cutting, or you may loosen the roots in the soil. Better use two hands, one to take the strain, holding the shoot below the cut.

Take your time over the pruning job and think things out as you work, visualizing the bush as it will appear after it has made its new growth in response to your pruning. If the ground is at all muddy, get yourself a plank to stand or kneel on, and wear a stout pair of gloves, as rose prickles can be murder!

Keep in mind the purposes of pruning: To remove all dead and diseased wood; to clear the centre of the bush of all ingrowing shoots so sun and air can enter freely; to limit the number of new shoots so the energy of the bush is channelled into the production of just a few superb, long-stemmed beauties rather than a multitude of poorish blooms; to preserve the symmetry and shapeliness of the bush.

With the hybrid teas, I start by cutting out all dead shoots and any which show the characteristic mottling of the bark that indicates disease or frost injury. Next, I take out, as low down as possible, any badly placed old stems which cross or rub against younger branches, or which may not leave enough room for the proper development of this year's new shoots.

With this done, I look over carefully the growth that remains. Always keep I mind that the thinner the shoot, the less likely it is to produce fat, vigorous growth buds and strong new wood. Weak, spindly stuff, therefore, is cut away ruthlessly.

The old shoots that remain should now be shortened by one-half to two-thirds of their length. Look for a plump, healthy bud or for a dormant eye fairly low down and pointing outward, away from the centre of the bush. Make your clean, slanting cut immediately above this bud or eye.

After each cut, take a look at the cross section of the freshly cut wood and check its color. If the pith in the centre is discolored yellow or brown, it indicates internal frost damage and it is unlikely that the selected eye or bud will develop properly. Choose another well-placed eye lower down, where the cut wood shows clean white or green pith.

The floribundas — these are the ones which bear their flowers in clusters — don't require anything like as severe pruning as the hybrid teas. Take out any weak or dead canes in their entirety, shorten the remaining main stems by about one-third their length, again to an outward-facing eye. Watch the pith as before, for undoubtedly there will be a lot of frost-damaged wood to be cut away this year.

With elderly floribundas, I think it is a good idea each year to take out one or two of the oldest, thickest, dark-colored canes, using a small saw, to encourage young replacement shoots.

The climbers are a different story. How and when they are pruned is indicated by the kind of flowers they bear.

The small-flowered ramblers are treated like raspberries — every cane which has borne flowers is cut right down to its base and the new young canes are tied in to take their place. Best time to do this is just after they finish flowering.

The large-flowered kinds need less pruning The laterals — that is, the side shoots or sub-branches — should be shortened to within two leaf joints from the main branch. Where the plant becomes bare at the base, as often happens with climbing roses, you can either bend down one or more of the lower shoots to cover the bare expanse of wall, or you can shorten one or two of the base shoots drastically, then train the resulting new growth to furnish the lower wall.

It is best to collect and burn all prunings, and give each plant a thorough, drenching treatment of any all-purpose rose spray as soon as the pruning job is completed.

War on Poverty Won

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The United States government announced today that the War on Poverty is over and the U.S. has won.

In an historic ceremony at the White House, the president signed the peace treaty which had been negotiated over a period of several months.

The terms of the treaty were outlined for reporters.

★ ★ ★

"The United States will withdraw all troops from the war on poverty within 30 days and will no longer supply financial aid to war-strewn poverty areas.

★ ★ ★

"Poor people will be allowed to choose their own destinies without interference from outside sources.

"All advisers to the war on poverty will be brought home.

"Attacks on health problems, unemployment, housing and education will cease as of midnight, March 5. A team of administration officials will be sent into the field to see that there are no violations of the agreement.

"If they find anyone continuing the war on poverty, they shall report them to the justice department in Washington.

"Legal aid for poor people will be withdrawn from combat areas.

"Poverty victims will remain in their own homes and will be forbidden to move into other territory while the treaty is in force.

"All weapons used to fight Poverty will be removed, crated and shipped out of the fighting areas.

"Those who were wounded in the war on poverty will be compensated with daily food stamps worth 50 cents.

"Prisoners of Poverty will not be exchanged. They must remain where they are until they are able to figure a way to escape their ghetto.

"As soon as the peace treaty goes into effect, all references to Poverty will be stricken from U.S. publications and the word will not be used by any administration official."

A White House spokesman told reporters, "The president believes this is the greatest peace treaty in the history of mankind. This was a war he did not start, but one which he vowed to end.

"Poverty has been defeated, and the president achieved the defeat with honor, something his critics predicted he could not do."

A reporter asked, "But suppose the forces of Poverty continue their aggression?"

The spokesmen said, "The United States has done all it can to fight Poverty. No matter what happens now, we're getting out of the war. The poor people are going to have to solve their own poroblems.

"This is the foundation of the Nixon Doctrine. The time has come when poor people have to stand on their own two feet and pull themselves up by their boot straps."

Another preporter asked, "Now that the war on poverty is over, will there be a peace dividend for the American people?"

★ ★ ★

"No," the White House spokesman said, "because the money used to fight the war on poverty is now needed to purchase military hardware which has been sadly neglected during the last seven years."

★ ★ ★

"Will the president grant amnesty to those who refused to fight in the war on poverty?" a reporter queried.

"Yes, he will," the spokesman said. "The president believes a man who refused to fight Poverty because of personal convictions should not carry this scar around with him for the rest of his life."

Nudity Accepted

JAMES BACON

HOLLYWOOD — Meg Foster's first scene in Welcome to Arrow Beach, which Laurence Harvey is directing, required nudity. No one was the least bit shocked when Meg disrobed because that is a way of life in Hollywood these days. Things were not the same when Harvey directed Sarah Miles in The Ceremony seven years ago. That was the first movie in recent film history in which a major actress had a sex scene that required total nudity. It caused a furore. When one London newspaper got hold of the photos and printed them Sarah's father-in-law-to-be at that time even sued Larry. "The reason leading actresses had not been doing scenes in the nude up to that point was because no one asked them," says Larry. Since then Sarah has stripped in such films as Ryan's Daughter and even Lady Caroline Lamb, which was directed by her husband Robert Bolt.

★ ★ ★

Don Stroud married actress Sally Little the other day in Las Vegas. He said he had been going with her for five years. He had been linked with Shelly Winters ever since he played one of her sons in Ma Barker.

★ ★ ★

Lee Majors bought some oil land in Oklahoma that hd topped wells on them. He redrilled deeper and hit some gushers. That explains why he just bought that new $200,000 home with no help from thhe finance company.

★ ★ ★

Roger Moore has signed for two more James Bond films after Live and Let Die. (Saltzman and Broccoli own the rights to eight more.) Roger says he has no intention of stepping out of the role the way Sean Connery did.

"I'm not one of those actors who turn around and kick what's doing well for them," says Roger. "If this turns into a long series, so much better. There's too much unemployment in our business."

Old Age Is Blessing

DR. STUART ROSENBERG

To be "full of years" used to be a good thing. But what our forefathers once considered to be a blessing, we now regard as a curse. To them, old age was not a defeat but a victory; not a punishment, but a privilege. It is no longer that — in our society.

Only a decade ago, we began to speak of the youth "sub-culture." Now it is the "youth culture." And it has just about taken over the whole of society.

No longer an underground movement, or an invisible road of protest, the "youth culture" rides firmly in the saddle.

What more obvious way to prove this point than to observe how the older generation actually stands before their young in fear and trembling.

In the process, however, because the older ones are terrorized by their juniors, the untested callow and raw demands of young people are often swallowed whole, like some magical potion, in the vain hope that the generations will thus draw closer.

It is good to listen to the voices of the young. But not at any price. It is downright reckless to destroy the wisdom or the achievements of age in order to appear friendly and flexible in the eyes of the young, vainly to court their flippant favor.

The "tragedy" of the young is that they, too, will soon be older — but they will be as unprepared for that stage of life as their elders permit them to be now.

The only way to begin to grow old intelligently is to start early enough in life to accumulate the inner resources that will make for growth in our later years.

One cardinal law we must learn — and we must learn it early: the human being is capable of continuous growth and he has infinite capacities for change and accommodation.

The extreme Freudian view which overemphasized the importance of the early childhood years was a necessary antidote in the days when it first sprang into the centre of our focus.

Too few were then paying attention to the real and vital world of the young. Too few learned how to listen to the urgent hopes of the growing child.

But to listen need not mean that those who are older should be overwhelmed by the young and rendered spiritually and intellectually impotent by them.

Our time needs a newer emphasis, one that will provide confidence in the ability of growing men to continue to grow, throughout life — to continue to have much to say and to do.

If only the young are considered relevant, then precious few "comforts" await the post-30 generation, save homes for the aged.

In spite of Freud, we make bold to suggest, it is our older days which are really the formative years.

They are rich in new possibilities to reform and to unlearn the follies of a life-time; to see through our earlier self-deceptions; to deepen and to grow in understanding and compassion: to widen the horizons of our awareness: and to refine our feelings for fairness in dealing with others.

And this above all: growing older we no longer need to compete in order to win; point-scoring has become passe. Now we can "win" even by losing — or more especially, by giving up our senseless hold on the transient, empty things we once thought were certain to bring us happiness.

SEQUOIA NATIONAL PARK, Calif. — The future of the world-famous giant Sequoia trees may be at stake because the flood of humans in this park is upsetting the natural ecology of the forests in which the trees—and the ants—live.

In 1969 two Sequoia trees in Hazel Grove here broke off above the root level, and it was noted that there were carpenter ant galleries at the site of the breaks.

After long study—and worry—the National Park Service recently enlisted the services of Dr. David Wood of the University of California, Berkeley, to look into the problem.

Wood, one of the nation's top entomologists, asked Dr. Charles David, a specialist from England, to join in the study. They expect to report to the park service in June, 1973, on their findings.

David, in response to an inquiry concerning possible "people pollution" that might have upset the natural links between the ants and the trees, said, "National Park Service biologists have speculated that large galleries of ants around the two stricken Sequoias weakened the trees and, also, that large numbers of people visiting this area might have contributed to unusually large ant populations."

David said his and Wood's studies will attempt to determine the effect of the ants—and the people—on the trees and in turn on the ecology of the forests in which both live. Ants have been associated with the Sequoias for many thousands of years. The ants build nests in the bark and the heartwood of the trees but seemingly operate in a similar way to many other species in the Sequois-mixed conifer forest and other forests of the world.

Believing that the ants have been a natural part of the forest ecosystem for thousands of years, the park service would like to maintain the natural balance which has evolved down through the years.

The prime interest at this time, thus, is to determine whether anything the crush of humans has done may have contributed to the increase in ants over their natural population numbers.

The two trees that broke off without reasonable explanation rang the alarm for the study Wood and David are conducting.

Carpenter Ants Threat to Giant Sequoias

SEQUOIA NATIONAL PARK, Calif. — The future of the world-famous giant Sequoia trees may be at stake because the flood of humans in this park is upsetting the natural ecology of the forests in which the trees—and the ants—live.

Ants have been associated with the Sequoias for many thousands of years. The ants build nests in the bark and the heartwood of the trees but seemingly operate in a similar way to many other species in the Sequoia-mixed conifer forest and other forests of the world.

Believing that the ants have been a natural part of the forest ecosystem for thousands of years, the park service would like to maintain the natural balance which has evolved down through the years.

The prime interest at this time, thus, is to determine whether anything the crush of humans has done may have contributed to the increase in ants over their natural population numbers.

The two trees that broke off without reasonable explanation rang the alarm for the study Wood and David are conducting.

David is careful not to openly blame public use of the park for the increase in carpenter ants—and the death of the two trees, part of the family of the largest living things in the world.

"Carpenter ants are found throughout the forest regions of the Northern Hemisphere," he said, "and are obviously an important link in the ecosystem. For instance, they are usually the major large invertebrate predator.

"Although I have been working on this problem since June, I have confirmed that ant populations differ in different areas of the forests (remote areas and areas used by the public) but have not yet found any clear correlation with human activity. Next June I hope to give you much more information."

In the meantime, what may be the ultimate in "people pollution" is of vital concern to the park service—whether too many visitors to this park of great national natural treasures cause ants to multiply too fast, and in turn destroy the Sequoias that the park rangers are pledged to protect.

PROVINCIAL COURT

A 22-year-old Victoria area woman who was fined $250 last Friday for shoplifting admitted Wednesday in Victoria Provincial Court she tried to get refunds both last Friday and the day after for goods she had not bought.

The woman, Lora Marion Keczan, of no fixed address, also admitted she had been addicted to heroin for more than two years, had a habit of about two capsules a day, at a cost of $40 and was without money, a place to live or any means of support.

She wept as she asked Judge William Ostler for bail pending a pre-sentence report but the judge said: "You can see that you will be forced to commit offences almost at once after you are released . . . You should know the hold this stuff has on you."

Miss Keczan pleaded guilty to two Saanich charges of fraud in trying to obtain refunds for a $20.97 lamp Friday at K-Mart, 3986 Shelbourne, and a $19.82 shampooer Saturday at the same store.

A Saanich detective said she was apprehended while trying a third refund and "asked police for help on numerous occasions last night, saying she had attended the (methadone) clinic but had got back on heroin as soon as she left."

Prosecutor John Macintyre said Miss Keczan was fined last Friday morning for shoplifting a $20 purse Feb. 15 from Woodward's after she had sought and was refused a refund on a $19.95 sweater.

Miss Keczan told th judge she would go back to the clinic if bail was allowed but Ostler replied: "Everybody feels a large measure of compassion for you, but it is essential something be done."

He remanded the case to March 12 for a pre-sentence report and sentence and Miss Keczan pounded the rail of the prisoner's box once as she was taken away to jail.

Two persons received suspended sentences and six-month probationary terms in separate Victoria shoplifting cases of theft involving less than $200.

They were Mrs. Vera Gwendolyn Graham, 51, of 1608 Camosun, who admitted Feb .14 she took a $2.50 item the day before from Shoppers' Drug Mart, 3104 Shelbourne, and Mrs. Enid Yvonne Vickers, who admitted Feb. 14 she took three items the day before from Woodward's.

Eskimo Sculpture for Art Gallery

Whalebone Art 'Find'

Six major examples of Eskimo sculpture have been acquired by the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria through the use of an emergency federal fund.

The price paid — just under $10,000 — comes from a $1 million fund established last year by the secretary of state to prevent the loss of important Canadian art to foreign buyers.

Four of the carvings are of exceptional size (four feet long) and all six are described by art gallery director Colin Graham as being work of unusual quality.

Graham said the six carvings showed up on the market for the first time last year and because they were among the largest ever seen, it was feared they would be grabbed up by the new breed of wealthy international collectors.

As a result, Graham rushed photos of the objects to Ottawa and was given immediate authority to purchase them under terms of the federal fund.

They went on display Wednesday.

Land Freeze Locks Saanich Housing Plans

Two Saanich housing programs intended to provide homes for about 250 middle-income families within the municipality are currently being held up by the provincial government's freeze on agricultural land, it was learned Wednesday.

Saanich housing chairman Ald. Edith Gunning said Wednesday that about 40 acres of marginal grazing land in the Roy Road area of western Saanich and 10 acres in the Leeds-Hulford district were affected.

Mrs. Gunning said she had written Municipal Affairs Minister James Lorimer Wednesday urging a meeting at the earliest opportunity to discuss the Leeds-Hulford scheme which was originally planned by the provincial government.

She said it was likely Saanich would soon apply to the provincial land-use committee for freeze exemption on the land. Saanich had earlier asked for exemption for the Roy Road land on which it was hoped some form of development could begin this year.

Saanich planner Gil Laurenson said Wednesday that assembly work for the Roy Road acreage had been going on for nearly three years. It was eventually proposed to assemble a further 60 acres in this area for housing for those in the middle-income bracket.

Laurenson said the housing would be developed under the land assembly provisions of the National Housing Act. "Saanich has a very great deal of money tied up, which is now frozen," said Laurenson. "This money is invested for the public benefit, this is a hard thing to take."

LONDON — The average Briton over 18 years of age downs 259 pints of beer, 71 shots of whisky, 27 dollopsof gin and 47 glasses of wine annually, and spends 5.3 per cent of his income to quench this thirst.

That average Briton will have more time to drink, younger bar companions and possibly more places to buy a lager or a snifter if Parliament endorses the liquor license changes recommended after a lengthy, sober look at the drinking laws here.

But if that average Briton is a patron of one of this country's more than 60,000 pubs and has a W. C. Fields-type of distaste for children ("anyone who hates dogs and children can't be all bad") he may face the awful prospect of sharing his favorite "local" with kids shrieking for something wet.

The proposals for such changes in the liquor licensing laws in this country, little changed since they were imposed to inhibit drunkenness among arms factory workers in the First World War, were suggested by a committee headed by Lord Errol of hale.

It recommended that pubs be allowed to stay open from 10 a.m. to midnight if they so desire, instead of the nine hours or so many of them now serve drinks. It also suggested that the drinker's age be lowered from 18 to 17 — and banned from pubs, be permitted to enter residential and holiday area pubs with their parents.

It also proposed some easing in the issuance of licenses for pubs. Some would-be operators have been denied permits to open on the grounds that there were already enough pubs in the area in which they wanted to go into business.

As expected, because drinking is a serious business and pubs are sacrosanct, hallowed and highly personal institutions here, the reaction to Lord Errol's proposals has ranged from gratification to uncertainty to incredulity.

"Kids? Let kids in here with their mums, even if they want only a lemon squash?" one habitue of the Cockpit asked in total unbelief the other day.

"His Lordship must be bonkers," he moaned as he dipped into a half-pint of bitter. "Bonkers!"

The National Federation of Licensed Victuallers, representing about 30,000 provincial pub-keepers, indicated it approved the recommendations, then added a qualifier which widened the melancholy reception from some drinkers to the new proposals.

Longer opening hours, the federation pointed out, might mean higher costs, "which would inevitably mean higher prices."

General Secretary Harry Shindler of the British National Association of Licensed House (mostly pub) managers made comparable noises.

"Our members work long hours now," he declared — his seeming implication being that if they worked longer or had to hire more operatives to keep the beer taps running 14 hours daily someone would have to pay. Pub drinkers didn't have to guess who.

Job Programs 'Ineffectual'

A Socred MLA charged in the Legislature Wednesday that new programs described by Premier Barrett as being job-creating ones will scarcely make a dent in the province's disastrous unemployment picture.

James Chabot (SC—Columbia River), who was labor minister in the former Socred administration, said the present total of close to 100,000 jobless in the province will only be cut by under 10,000 as a result of the new programs.

"We'll still have 91,834 unemployed in B.C. and that's still the highest figure ever for this province," Chabot said.

He added that the government, since taking office five months ago, has "failed miserably" to create new jobs when they are necessary, "which is now."

The NDP land bank and accelerated home ownership policies, touted by Barrett as the major source of new jobs, are misdirected, Chabot claimed, because they will employ skilled rather than unskilled workers where the major problem of unemployment exists.

Earlier, Don Phillips (SC—South Peace) accused the government of turning its back on the misery of the thousands of unemployed in B.C. He claimed business in his riding was down between 30 per cent and 50 per cent in the past month, compared with February, 1972, and said Barrett "doesn't know what to do" to get the economy moving.

Phillips castigated the government for its "off and on, limited growth, no growth, up and down, sideways, black and white economic policies" and said the whole economy of the province was suffering from the premier's indecision.

Barrett defended the government's record and cited figures for government revenues during January and provincial sales tax returns for February, up 17.3 per cent and 14.5 per cent respectively over the same period in 1972, as evidence of the healthy state of the B.C. economy.

He also rejected the argument that $80 million worth of new government spending, on land and housing, wouldn't create jobs for the unskilled when it is injected into the economy. The premier said the NDP government inherited situation in which it found "pools of unskilled" workers and despite heavy spending on vocational education lack of a planned approach to retraining them.

In the Legislature

Barrett Refuses Liberal Request

A Liberal MLA called in the Legislature Wednesday for Premier Barrett to invite party leader David Anderson to accompany him to Washington, D.C., March 9 for talks on the proposed Alaska pipeline and west coast tanker route.

Garde Gardom (L—Point Grey) accused the government of ignoring Anderson's outstanding contribution to the fight against massive oil shipments through west coast waters. He urged Barrett to take the Liberal leader along as an adviser on what is really "a life or death environmental issue which is beyond politics."

Barrett, whose estimates were being debated in the house, refused to accede to the Liberal request. He said Anderson, who was invited to the premier's office with the house leaders of two other opposition parties for advance release of both the throne speech and budget, had not turned up on either occasion.

Socred and Tory spokesmen took advantage of those occasions to discuss a number of subjects informally with him, Barrett said.

Quoting from Hansard, the premier added that when Anderson discussed the original announcement that B.C. would make direct representations to Washington the Liberal leader had derided the idea and said moves by President Nixon to get around a U.S. appeals court ruling blocking the Alaskan pipeline were expected and "no cause for alarm."

$2.25 Million Proposed

B.C. Studies Viet Medical Aid

The provincial government will probably spend $2¼ million on medical facilities for North and South Vietnam.

As a first step, the government has hired a private hospital administration consultant to head a team which will make a detailed study of the problems.

The consultant, Dr. John Wong of Toronto, was introduced by Health Minister Dennis Cocke and Provincial Secretary Ernest Hall at a news conference Wednesday.

At the conference the ministers also announced that they will place a motion before the house asking it to endorse the provision of $2.25 million "as the province's contribution to medical aid in Vietnam."

Wong's study will cost about $50,000, Hall said. This money has been provided from the provincial Aid to Developing Countries and World Disaster Fund.

Wong and his team will leave for Vietnam in mid-March to begin the study which is supposed to take about six months to complete. Wong will, however, return in mid-May to make an interim report to the government.

The moves come after the Legislature about two weeks ago unanimously approved a resolution put forward by Liberal Allan Williams to help in the provision of medical facilities for the Vietnamese children.

Cocke said all British Columbians, and all Canadians, will be asked to increase the $2.25 million figure through private donations. "Service clubs, fraternal orders, trade unions and private citizens, including school children in the province, will be asked to make every effort to help the children of Vietnam through this special project."

"Other organizations have indicated they want to cooperate, and we hope it will be a cross-Canada kind of operation . . . we're just trying to impress the rest of the country to do the same."

Included on Wong's team will be Dr. Serge Dumas of Quebec City, a rehabilitative medicine specialist who speaks fluent Vietnamese. Also on the team will be a quantity surveyor to study the cost and related factors of founding a medical facility.

Wong approached the B.C. government offering his services after reading in the newspapers about plans to help Vietnam with medical facilities. He has been a consultant for 18 years, since completing post-graduate work at Yale Medical school.

Among his other projects, he worked to organize the first geriatric hospital in the U.S., and last year did consulting work in Nigeria. He was born in Singapore.

Although he has never been to Vietnam, "I think I have an empathy with what they (the Vietnamese) have had to go through," he said. He noted that few objective studies have been done on the needs and problems of Vietnam from a medical point of view.

Hall said he will inform the federal government and other governments of the steps B.C. is hoping to take.

Plea Renewed For Port Study

Prince Rupert Mayor Peter Lester Wednesday met the NDP caucus of the Legislature and renewed a request made 10 days ago for an "independent ecological, engineering and economic survey" of port development.

He said in an interview the study should weigh "the relative merits of northern and southern ports." The government hasn't said yes or no yet to the proposal, "but we expect one will be forthcoming shortly," the mayor added.

"We expect an answer to be forthcoming shortly. If the government is entirely sincere, and I believe they are, in trying to do what they can to develop all sectors of the province then logically a survey such as this should be undertaken, so that we're dealing with facts and not suppositions."

Lester was accompanied by Joe Scott, chairman of the Port Development Commission of Prince Rupert.

Probation Terms for Taciturn Shoplifters

Their real names finally are known but little else is, including the true reason for their silence. Court sources, police and an immigration officer said Tuesday the main reason probably was the one pointed out by Judge William Ostler — stubbornness.

The price for that stubbornness was almost four days in jail each along with suspended sentences and six-month probationary terms.

They gave their names as William Morris Turner and Susan Eileen Turner when they were arrested at about noon Saturday on a joint Saanich charge of shoplifting $27.52 worth of groceries from the Safeway store at 3555 Douglas.

The girl dropped a bag containing the groceries and tried to run from the store, then had to be forced to return to it. The man gave his age as 21, the girl said she was 19, but they refused to say anything else.

By the time they appeared Monday morning in Victoria Provincial Court to enter pleas of guilty, the girl had admitted her name was Susan Moore and she was from Ontario while he was from Vancouver.

But that was all. Ostler remanded them to Tuesday morning for sentence after prosecutor John Macintyre asked for time so Saanich police and Canadian immigration officials could investigate further. The immigration men were called in because police felt the two might be from the U.S. — they wouldn't say they were not.

The only new information Tuesday was Miss Moore's statement to a Saanich detective that she was silent because "she did not want to pay any $200 fine."

Ostler told the two that police were only seeking "important statistical information that you are obliged to give" and added he didn't blame police for becoming apprehensive when they were so stubborn.

He said he might ask for pre-sentence reports which could mean the two would be in custody for some days until the reports were ready. They then agreed to answer the police and were remanded to Wednesday morning.

The Saanich detective said he had spoken to the man after court Tuesday and had been given the name of Glenn Wallace Goddard of New Liskeard, Ont. Police there said Glenn Goddard was in New Liskeard but added his brother James Walter Goddard might be the one in Victoria.

The detective, who normally works a day shift, said it was 11 p.m. before "Turner" admitted he was James Walter Goddard, 20, and said there was a warrant for him in Ontario for possesssion of marijuana.

Ostler told the two that their stubborn attitude had cost them several days in jail and imposed probation rather than fines they could not have paid, which would likely have meant one-month jail terms.

Police and court officials said the reason for silence might have been anything — but most likely was just stubborn refusal to talk to a blue uniform.

Urban Portion Of Purse 'Needs Boost'

B.C. cities should become partners of the provincial government rather than its creatures, Garde Gardom (L—Point Grey) said in the Legislature Wednesday.

The Liberal member called for a complete review of the existing municipal tax structure in relation to both the provincial and federal governments so that cities can afford to provide such costly services as mass transit.

Gardom added the government should go as far as creating a separate department of urban and city affairs which would "first and foremost" work for the interests of major population centres.

He went on to propose several specific measures: provincial guarantees for all future municipal borrowing; income tax exemption on earnings from investments in municipal debentures; full local taxes on provincial and crown corporation holdings and total local zoning control within municipal boundaries.

Premier Barrett, whose estimates were being debated, said the NDP was aware of certain "tax anomalies" affecting local governments.

In an effort to correct the situation, the government has removed the 10 per cent ceiling on assessment increases which was protecting large industries at the expense of the homeowner, the premier said.

Mayor Peter Pollen of Victoria, who isn't a member of the NDP, was among the "outstanding provincial leaders" who have praised the government for this action.

Barrett added, in Pollen's opinion Victoria homeowners could be in line for a reduction of as much as 20 per cent in their taxes as a result. And the premier said his government wasn't even adding to industry's tax load — "just asking them to pay a fair share."

The premier said the government was currently looking into the whole question of tax restructuring as it affects local and provincial authorities but wasn't going to proceed "on a crisis to crisis basis."

"But I don't subscribe to the theory that the small town has lost its place. The problems are the same as those of big cities. Only the scale is different."

Premier Absolves Firm

In the Legislature

Premier Barrett told the Legislature Wednesday if there was any error in contract prices for construction of northern extensions of the B.C. Railway, the fault belongs to the crown corporation and not the contractor.

He was answering questions by Dr. Patrick McGeer (L—Point Grey) who earlier in the debate on the premier's estimates had produced figures showing Keen Industries of Fort Nelson had received final payment on two contracts amounting to approximately double the amount of its original bid.

Barrett said he was informed by B.C. Railway officials that the standard practice was followed on the Keen contracts. This involved, the premier said, the railway estimating the basic unit price of moving soil and rock as a means of comparison for all company bids.

Weather and soil conditions on a rugged job like the 250-mile extension of steel from Fort St. John to Fort Nelson often make this basis for comparison invalid, according to the railway's statement read in the house. Barrett added it was on the basis of this information that he concluded "if there was any error" in the Keen contracts that it was not the contractor's fault.

McGeer said he accepted the explanation but asked the premier, in light of government and pension funds which are invested in the crown corporation, to revise what he called "the grossly inadequate" methods used by B.C. Railway to estimate contract prices.

Barrett replied that the member had a "valid point" and added he had called for a further report on contracting procedures. But he reminded the house that several months ago, shortly after the NDP took office, the government ordered a study and report on all audit and budgeting procedures for crown corporations.

"If there is any disparity I want to find out," the premier said. "I won't be placed in the position of having to say in a year from now, 'I didn't do anything about.' "

Treaty Holds Reward

Dr. Patrick McGeer (L—Point Grey) told the Legislature Tuesday night B.C. stands to gain $500 million by attempting to re-negotiate the Columbia River treaty.

He said during debate on estimates that between $330 million and $500 million could come to the province as payment for peaking power generated at dams like Grand Coulee currently being quadrupled in capacity, and ecological damage resulting from Columbia storage in B.C.

Premier Barrett said the government is continuing its attempt to re-open the treaty and added: "I hope we can recover something out of this very tragic deal."

So far, B.C. hasn't appointed its representatives to the federal-provincial liaison committee which will study the bid before Ottawa and Washington begin formal talks. Meanwhile, the premier said the province is collecting additional information.

'Dead Blank Faces' in Private Hospitals

Elderly Care Heartless?

By CLAUDE ADAMS
Colonist Reporter

A biting criticism of nurses, doctors and other health staff who build a "veritable mountain of stress" for old people in extended-care homes has come from a Victoria-area nursing director.

Mrs. Vera McIver, director at St. Mary's Priory Hospital in Langford, made an emotional appeal for "humanity" in a speech to the B.C. Hospital Association meeting in Vancouver Monday.

In an interview later, she spoke of the "dead blank faces" in private hospitals for the aged, where their emotional and social needs are neglected.

"The nurse searches for the Holy Grail in the form of mechanical duties, but these are things that anybody can do," she said.

Health personnel are disease-oriented, pill-oriented and cure-oriented, and when the actual symptoms of illness disappear, their function stops.

Mrs. McIver said that when the cut finger of a patient has been bandaged, or a pain relieved, the nurse cuts off communication with the patient. "With all her body language, she shuts the patient up."

She stressed that the problem is an international one, and the nurse shouldn't bear all the blame. The fault rests with the education setup and in many cases, the nursing supervisor.

"The young nurse gets on the floor and the supervisor says 'You'd better do it the way its always been done,' and this stifles any ideas the nurse may have."

Mrs. McIver frequently used terms like "human vegetation" and "rootlessness" in describing how extended care hospitals affect old patients.

"They moved from their homes, to a boarding home, and when they become too ill they go into a private hospital, and from there into extended care, and finally into acute care.

"The effect of this rootlessness is that the patient finally loses his identity. He becomes a de-individualized."

She also deplored how some elderly couples are separated when, for example, one requires extended care and the other only intermediate care.

The major failing of the medical community, she continued, is that it has ignored the findings of other scientists, psychologists and sociologists on how people react to certain conditions.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration, for instance, has investigated something called "restrictive confined isolated monotony," the conclusions of which could be woven into the framework of extended care.

Mrs. McIver quoted famed "stress" expert Dr. Hans Selye of Montreal who has demonstrated that emotional and social neglect can cause a hormone imbalance in the person, leading to sickness and even death.

"We build a veritable mountain of stress for our people," she said.

But there was a note of optimism in her bleak landscape. Shesaid the situation is getting somehwat better, and a good model might be the work of St. Mary's Priority, where nurses don't wear uniforms and the word "illness" is not emphaisized.

The 95-bed hospital is an acknowledged pioneer in care for the elderly.

Hairdressers are brought in, the latest fashion styles are discussed, children are permitted to bring in their pets, and the whole community is involved, Mrs. McIver said.

"We're even making wine now, and wine becomes a therapy," she said.

Plane Lands On Highway

NAKUSP, B.C. (CP) — A light plane on a flight from California to Alaska was forced by bad weather and a fuel shortage to land on Highway 22 near here, about 90 miles north of Nelson.

Pilot Troy Price, of Palm Springs, Calif., alone in the plane at the time, notified RCMP, obtained fuel and, with police blocking traffic, took off again an hour and a half later.

Effluent Discharge

Permit Fought

An application to the provincial pollution control branch by Jordan River Mines Ltd. for a permit to discharge additional untreated effluent into the ocean has been opposed by the Capital Regional Board.

The decision to register objections to the issuing of the permit was made at the regional board's meeting Wednesday when Howard Elder, director for Sooke, said the firm has failed to look after existing discharge facilities.

Elder said broken sewage lines have caused damage to crops on adjacent properties.

The firm's management, he said, doesn't appear to have made a real effort to comply with the terms of the original permit.

Before the company receives permission to increase its effluent discharge, Elder said, it should live up to its present commitment.

Comfort Stations To Sprout Signs

There won't be any new comfort stations in downtown Victoria, but the existing ones will be easier to find in the future.

Council's public works committee instructed City Engineer Jim Garnett to advertise the existence of toilet facilities by signs. Included in the list to be better publicized are those in service stations. No decision has been made regarding wording the sigsn.

There has been a change in the time and place of the appearance of the popular singing group The Bells.

Originally scheduled for two shows at the University of Victoria gymnasium on March 17, The Bells will now put on only one show, it will start at 8:30 p.m. on April 5, a Thursday, and it will be at the Royal Theatre.

The changes were announced this week by International Promotion Consultants of Vancouver, which is handling the group's western Canada tour.

A stand-up luncheon with coffee and sandwiches and a few words "en Francais" will be laid on for about 200 delegates to a convention of French weekly newspaper editors visiting Victoria next July — provided the four central municipalities are willing to pay the necessary $450.

Victoria Mayor Peter Pollen told members of the inter-municipal committee at a meeting Tuesday something should be done for "this group of vigorous little weekly newspapers."

A public lecture and two seminars on Buddhist art of Nepal will be held at University of Victoria next week, sponsored by the university's history in art department.

The lecture will take place at 8 p.m. Monday, March 5, on Bronzes of Kashmir, in Room 168, Elliott Building. The two seminars, also at 8 p.m., will take place Tuesday in Rooms 208-9, Craigdarroch Building, and Wednesday in Rooms 203-4, also in Craigdarroch Building.

An unusual volcanic landscape containing a fascinating variety of plant and animal life will be seen Friday in the continuing Heritage Court Presents series in Newcombe Auditorium.

The audience will be shown slides and will hear a description of Mt. Edziza, now preserved as a provincial park. It is midway between the Stikine and Iskut Rivers, in northwestern British Columbia, near Telegragh Creek.

Chinese Invite Ormandy

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Eugene Ormandy, 73, beamed with a youthful vigor last week about a forthcoming trip of the Philadelphia Orchestra to China.

He called the planned visit "the most wonderful opportunity for our orchestra to spread its fame and play our music."

It will be the first American orchestra to play in China in at least 30 years. The trip was announced Thursday by Henry Kissinger, President Nixon's foreign affairs adviser.

Ormandy, who has been ill lately, said he was confined to bed Thursday morning when the telephone rang.

He said he spoke with both Nixon and Kissinger, who told him the orchestra had been invited by Premier Chou En-lai to appear in China sometime this year.

The Eight-Cent Revolution

By AL COLLETTI

NEW YORK (CP) — For years, a phone worker mailed monthly payments for his telephone bill in an envelope without a stamp on it.

It was a form of therapy for his anger over not getting what the left was a fair shake from the telephone company. Nothing was ever said about the postage due. The company simply paid it.

Just as graffiti are a growing phenomenon in the New York subway system and elsewhere, the eight-cent postal ripoff has spread to many parts of the United States.

More people are omitting a stamp on mailings to large companies when it comes time to pay monthly bills. Mainly affected are utilities, big department stores, credit-card firms and even oil companies.

The omissions drive the companies and the post office wild.

No one is sure how many persons are involved. But the number is large enough to worry corporate and postal officials. The cost is running into thousands of dollars weekly.

R. H. Macy and Co., a major New York department store chain, says it pays for about 1,000 stampless letters a week. A Boston utility company says that in the last two years the number of stampless letters has doubled to 200 a day.

One woman who says gleefully none of her mail to big companies has a stamp on it sees the ripoff as justification for the amount of unwanted promotional material she receives with her bills.

Also, it is a way of getting back at credit companies who charge what she feels are exorbitant rates of interest.

Many companies have set up special funds at local post offices to pay for all the postage due each day. The Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Co. says it paid almost $45,000 in San Francisco and Oakland for due postage last year, mostly for stampless bill payments.

One postal official says efforts to spot stampless mail in the hopper can foul up the processing of stamped mail which goes through a highly-automated postal system.

Companies could tack on eight cents — the first-class rate — to the customer's next bill. But to change bookkeeping for just eight cents would cost more than getting the stamp money back.

A federal law says that sending mail with intent to avoid paying postage is a crime punishable by a $300 fine. But no one has been prosecuted because intent is difficult to prove.

There are several variations of the stampless envelope scheme. One is to send back magazine subscription cards or other promotional cards without putting on any names, or using fictitious names.

International Bodies Ousted

Merritt Mine Workers Join Canadian Union

MERRITT, B.C. (CP) — Workers at Bethlehem Copper's Highland Valley mine Tuesday ousted two large international unions, voting 164 to 102 for representation by the independent Canadian Association of Industrial, Mechanical and Allied Workers (CAIMAW) which has about 1,500 members in B.C.

The ousted unions were the International Union of Operating Engineers Local 115 and the International Laborers' Union Local 168 (tunnel and rock workers).

CAIMAW spokesman George Brown said, "The engineers put on a pretty tough fight at Bethlehem, telling the men if they stayed in their union they could always go into construction if they were laid off, and that tradesmen (mostly welders and mechanics) shouldn't trust an inexperienced, small Canadian union."

Jim Malange, president of the 8,000-member engineers local, said he is not too excited about the upset, "but now it's up to CAIMAW to produce and prove they can do better."

Malange said he himself favors Canadian union autonomy, "but just breaking away from established unions is a very poor route."

Meanwhile, the British Columbia Labor Relations Board has scheduled a hearing here Tuesday in connection with a certification dispute between the United Steelworkers of America and the Canadian Workers Union.

The two unions are vying to represent 3,600 Cominco employees in Trail, Kimberley and Salmo. The workers are now repreesented by the Steelworkers.

A spokesman for the Steelworkers said Wednesday the hearing will hear argument as to whether the labor relations board can accept a second application for certification from the Canadian union.

In Sault St. Marie, Ont., James Griffin, international bargaining chief for the United Steelworkers of America, said Tuesday night he was "shocked and astonished" when he learned of Canadian Labor Minister John Munro's suggestion that international unions may no longer be able to represent fairly both Canada and the United States.

He said those who advocate the separation of national unions from international organizations "are so many crackpots."

"They don't understand what this international unions versus multi-national corporations ballgame is all about," he said.

Conservation Dream True Against Odds

By JOHN BUNKER
Colonist-Copley Service

Wherever conservationists are fighting to preserve natural beauty and wildlife from commercial exploitation and destruction they can look to the new Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore for inspiration.

Creation of this 8,200-acre park on the shores of Lake Michigan near Gary, Ind., is one of the significant conservation achievements of the decade. Significant because it preserves what Secretary of the Interior Rogers C. B. Morton called at the recent dedication "a paradise of white sands, shoreline . . . of egrets, whistling swans and beavers."

Significant, too, because it shows how a very small group of dedicated people can make a dream come true against great odds.

If it hadn't been for the inspired vision and the two-fisted fighting of a few conservationists this "paradise" would have long since been covered with steel mill slag, highways, airport runways, railroad marshaling yards and asphalt parking lots, its great natural heritage lost forever.

As usual, the powerful commercial interests and the politicians who could have profited from destruction of the dunes called their conservation opponents "enemies of progress . . . fuddy-duddies more concerned with birds and trees than with economic development."

But the friends of the dunes, organized as the Save the Dunes Council, ignored the ridicule and the semantic smoke screens to insist that this unique natural area should be preserved for the future.

They didn't win the complete victory they had hoped for.

Over the years they had seen some of the finest of the dunes areas converted for industrial use. The first bill introduced in Congress called for a 12,000-acre preserve but by the time it was finally approved, the area had been trimmed to 8,000. Behind-the-scene efforts are under way to trim it still more.

In dedicating the park some months ago, Morton called it "a triumph in man's desire for beauty and open space . . . the sand flats, rising dunes and rare combination of geologic formations make it one of the most famous natural areas in the hemisphere."

As with most conservation efforts, the Indiana Dunes story is a series of frustrations and discouragement and political back stabbing that would have flattened all but the most determined.

First attempt to preserve the dunes as a great natural resource began some 50 years ago when Stephen Mather, first head of the National Park Service, proposed a 25-mile-long Dunes National Park extending from Gary, Ind., to Michigan City. Nothing was done about this proposal and as the years went by much of the area was grobbled up for industrial uses.

A three-mile section of beach with 2,300 acres of adjacent dune area was preserved by creation of the Indiana Dunes State Park in 1923.

The real fight for the dunes began in 1952 when Mrs. Dorothy Buell and a group of concerned women started the Save the Dunes Council.

Now in her 80s and a guest of honor at the park's dedication, Mrs. Buell enlisted the help of Sen. Paul Douglas, who forefronted for the project when other political figures turned a cold shoulder. Sens. Birch Bayh and Vance Hartke later became ardent allies, too.

The Izaak Walton League and other conservation organizations enlisted support.

Friends of the dunes soon discovered a point vital to all conservation efforts. Nothing is accomplished by conservationists just talking to conservationists. They took their cause to the community . . . talking to any group that would listen . . . showing slides . . . pleading for preservation of what Morton was later to call "a massive achievement of nature."

Mrs. Sylvia Troy, president of Save the Dunes Council ofers a special world of advice to fellow conservationists battling for preservation of local woods, shores, lakes or wetlands.

8 CARDS OF THANKS

The gratitude in our hearts can never be fully expressed, but we want our friends relatives and neighbours to know how much their kind words and expressions of sympathy have meant to us during our recent time of sorrow in the sad loss of our wife, mother and sister, Rosa Farkas.
—The Farkas Family, 3201 Richmond

We wish sincerely to thank our friends and relatives for their kind expressions of sympathy and for the beautiful floral offerings in our recent loss of our dear wife, mother and grandmother — Lillian E. Murphy. Thanks to Dr. Heimlich and Rev. Hunter. — Ivan (Pat) Murphy and family.

9 IN MEMORIAM

GRAHAM — To the memory of a wonderful Husband, Father and "Buppa", George E., who passed away so suddenly March 1, 1972.
They say time heals all sorrows
And helps us to forget.
But time so far has only proved
How much we miss him yet.
He never failed to do his best,
His heart was true and tender.
He worked so hard for those he loved;
And left us to remember.
Remembered always by your belovd wife Edna; daughters Cynthia, Eleanor; son Richard; and their Families.

HALL—In loving memory of a dear son and brother Mark, who passed away suddenly March 1, 1970.
Gone is the face we loved so dear,
Silent is the voice we loved to hear;
Too far away for sight or speech,
But not too far for thought to reach,
Sweet to remember him who once was here
And who, though absent, is just as dear.
—Sadly missed by Mom, Dad and family.

HUNGLE — In loving memory of a dear son and brother, Gordie, who passed away March 1, 1970.
Nothing but memories as we journey on,
Longing for a smile from a loved one gone;
None knows the depths of our deep regret,
But we remember when others forget.
Remembered Always — Mom and Dad, Garry, Janice and Families.

BUREAU OF USELESS INFORMATION: Wednesday's answer — two actors who directed themselves with disastrous results were John Wayne in The Alamo and Marlon Brando in One-Eyed Jacks. Wayne won his Oscar for True Grit and Brando won his first for On the Waterfront. He's bound to repeat this year for The Godfather.
Today's question — knocking off for a TV quickie, name the actor and actress who play the title roles in Bridget Loves Bernie. And identify the famous Broadway play on which the series is based. Answers Friday.

Tacoma's Channel 11 will try something new for television in this area starting March 12 — showing the same movie at 8 p.m. on the five week-nights of Monday through Friday.

The idea was tried successfully in San Francisco and Portland, and Channel 11's week-of-five films will include Grace Kelly in Country Girl, Clint Walker in Night of the Grizzly, and Charlton Heston as The Savage.

Also on March 12, Channel 11 will bring back Star Trek at 6 p.m. weekdays, move Perry Mason and Dragnet to weekend showings and cut Merv Griffin to half an hour at 1:30 p.m. weekdays for two weeks, when Griffin will be dropped and vanish from this area.

Today's question — knocking off for a TV quickie, name the actor and actress who play the title roles in Bridget Loves Bernie. And identify the famous Broadway play on which the series is based. Answers Friday.

Thursday Highlights

C-10:00 p.m.—Otherwise, it's all regulars like Marketplace, which ends its runs with a look at TV sets, among other things—2.

CABLE 10—7:00 p.m. Bullseye: Ottawa; 7:30, You and the Law shows more Saanich police hobbies; 8:00, a new Camosun College series The 1972 Tax Return; 8:30, Project Travel; 9:00, Bud Pauls and B.C. Trails.

Thursday Movies

9:30 a.m.—I Married a Witch (charming 1942 fantasy-comedy), Fredric March, Veronica Lake, Susan Hayward. It has the Lubitsch touch—4.

12:00 noon—Weekend with Father (miserable 1952 romanticomedy), Van Heflin, Pat Neal. In my house, a weekend with father is like life on Devil's Island, especially if the Canucks are losing—13.

C-12:45—So Evil, So Young (1957 women's prison, so so), Jill Ireland. Starts on Channel 8 at 2 p.m.—6.

C-3:30 p.m.—Charge at Feather River (flat 3-D western), Vera Miles—5.

● 3:30—Psycho (1960 Hitchcock classic), Tony Perkins, Janet Leigh, Martin Balsam. Definitely not for small fry—7.

C-7:00—Sam Hill (quite enjoyable 1970 western action-comedy), Ernest Borgnine. J. D. Cannon and his con group are most amusing—13.

● C-9:00—Honor Thy Father (new Gay Talese story of the Bonanno mobster family), Joseph Bologna, Raf Vallone, Brenda Vaccaro. Recommended only because it could be Friday's topic of conversation—7.

C-9:00—Banyon (1971 NBC series pilot), Robert Forster, Darren McGavin. The series flopped this season because Friday viewing is low, Forster is no Bogart and 1930s nostalgia is not a mass-appeal thing—12.

11:00—Stage to Tucson (1966 Rod Cameron western). Cameron is as laconic as Randolph Scott; the difference is, he's fatter—13.

C-11:30—Haunts of the Very Rich (poorish 1972 suspense), Lloyd Bridges, Cloris Leachman, Edward Asner, many more. Big cast, small result—4.

11:30—Night of the Iguana (good 1964 Tennessee Williams lonely-people drama), Richard Burton, Ava Gardner, Deborah Kerr, Sue Lyon. Actually, it's too uneven to be great—7, 12.

11:50—I Live in Grosvenor Square (1944 Anna Neagle romance). Plus Rex Harrison, Dean Jagger and also known as A Yank in London—2.

12:00—The Young Savages (so-so 1961 DA vs. hoodlums), Burt Lancaster, Shelley Winters. If you must—6, 8.

12:45 a.m.—April Showers (1948 romanticomedy), Jack Carson, Ann Sothern. I'm so old that, when April Showers come my way, I just get wet—13.

Thursday Radio

10:00 a.m.—Between Ourselves repeats a profile of North Pole navigator Captain Bob Bartlett—CBU-FM (105.7).

1:00 p.m.—Afternoon Concert includes the rarely heard Gershwin recording of Rhapsody in Blue—CBU-FM.

8:00—Encore: a National Arts Centre Orchestra concert—CBU-FM.

●—Recommended; C—Color.

IT'S THE SILVER ANNIVERSARY H—O—N—D—A SELL-A-BRATION

We're out to maintain our last year's NO. ONE position in sales for B.C. — and even better our lead, if we can!!

H—O—N—D—A S— been head and shoulders above all the competition — for years and we'd like to be right there with them — doing our part to help them have a truly successful and happy anniversary!

WAREHOUSE H—O—N—D—A SHOWROOM

H—O—N—D—A

T—R—A—D—E S—H—O—R—T—A—G—E

Our used motorcycle turnover has just been fantastic lately and we're paying and allowing big prices to keep our "used" selection up to its usual make and model unlimited approval.

If you have an "offmake and want to swing with the best

NOW IS THE TIME

could hit us any day now, so don't pay more a little later on.

Take part in the H—O—N—D—A SELL-A-BRATION

Islands Study Encompasses Eight Districts

All regional districts whose jurisdictions include islands lying between Vancouver Island and the Mainland will be invited to make presentations to the Legislature's Municipal Affairs Committee studying the question of Gulf Islands development. The committee decided Wednesday that its recommendations should be applicable to all the small islands along the coast, not just to the little group known formally as the Gulf Islands.

Later, committee chairman Alfred Nunweiler (NDP—Fort George) said he expected the study to take longer than the currect session of the Legislature. If the house approved, it might go on for close to a year, he said.

He hoped the committee would tour several of the Gulf Islands, at least one in some detail, he said, getting to know what conditions there now were really like and what problems the Islands were facing.

The committee would also be receiving briefs from the regional districts, and also from any other groups that cared to submit them. It had already received a request from the Capital Region, asking to have its two Gulf Island directors appear before the committee, and other regional districts involved would be contacted.

If all the islands between the mainland and Vancouver are taken into account, there are eight regional districts involved — Capital, Comox-Strathcona, Cowichan, Nanaimo, Mount Waddington, Greater Vancouver, Sunshine Coast and Powell River.

The suggestion to extend the committee's terms of reference to include all the islands came from Karen Sanford (NDP—Comox) who noted that islands in her riding, such as Quadra and Cortes, were involved in development problems.

Diphtheria Cases Put in Isolation

PORT ALICE (CP) — Two new suspected diphtheria cases were isolated here Wednesday.

Dr. D. G. Morris, the resident doctor, said further tests at provincial labs in Vancouver will determine whether the two are confirmed cases.

He said Diane Lundin, 10, the first person to contract diptheria here in more than 30 years is recovering well.

Morris said more than 150 swab tests have been taken and more are being done daily. He said 370 children have been inoculated and more injections are being carried out at Port McNeil high school to bring the total to 500.

Contractors Win Bid For Injunction

By RODNEY WADE
Colonist Correspondent

PORT ALBERNI — Trouble usually comes in threes. And Wednesday the IWA discovered the truth of this statement.

First off, three local asssociations of truck loggers and owner-operators were successful in their attempt to get an injunction against the IWA and MacMillan Bloedel, a truck logger's representative said.

Tom Fisher, secretary-manager of the Western Independant Truck Logger's Association said he was informed by Clifford Coulson, director of the association who was in Vancouver, that the owner-operators had been successful in their attempt to gain injunctions against the IWA and the company.

"This means the IWA and its offices will have to adhere to the terms of their master agreement with the company and go back to work. I also presume, said Fisher, that MacMillan Bloedel will lift the 'forcemajeur' clause that they the owner-operators. This instituted and invoked against means that, hopefully, our members will now go back to work this morning."

Fisher said that he thought it unlikely that the IWA would walk out again in light of the injunction.

"I can't quite see the IWA being that foolish and flying in the face of an injunction of this nature. However it is possible that they will do so. And if they do, then we will have to seek legal advice again.

"However, barring any unusual circumstances, we will be back on the job today. This period has put considerable strain on the pockets of the owner-operators."

The dispute began two weeks ago when the owner-operators refused to sign a memorandum of agreement things, have obliged operators to pay to the union a fee equal to union dues yet without the return of union benefits.

There has been no comment as yet from union officials.

However, with president of the IWA local 1-85, Earl Foxcroft, still at the court hearings in Vancouver, local boom men failed to turn up for the afternoon shift at Somass mill. Union treasurer John Squire was unable to ascertain the reason for the walkout late last night. The mill lacking a sufficient supply of logs was shut down at 6:15 p.m.

An oil spill near Bellingham, Wash., by Wednesday evening had broken into a number of patches is too thinly spread to be cleaned up by equipment, and should be dispersed by the tide, according to U.S. Coast Guard officials.

The spill was first reported 7:30 a.m. Wednesday as a thin spill about seven miles long off the west coast of Lummi Island which is nine miles southwest of Bellingham.

Coast Guard helicopters which surveyed the area found at least eight separate patches of light oil between Alden Bank, northwest of Lummi Island, and Eliza Island, off the south tip of Lummi.

A Coast Guard spokesman said the oil was in "thin sheens" — so thin that it was difficult to take samples.

The thickest patch was south of Eliza Island and the Washington state department of ecology earlier made preparations to clear it up. However the oil proved too thin and the idea was abandoned.

Because the patches are so thin they will be dissipated by tidal action, he said. The general tidal flow in the area is south so there is little danger of the oil spreading to Canadian waters, he said.

A lot of shipping moves through the area and it is probable that the oil came from a vessel but no culprit has been found, said the spokesman.

Lansdowne Repeats

Lansdowne defeated Cedar Hill, 24-19, Wednesday at Cedar Hill to win the Victoria Junior High School Girls' Basketball League title for the second successive year.

In the consolation final for the third place, Colquitz beat Oak Bay, 38-32, and gained the final Victoria berth in the eight-team Vancouver Island tournament Friday and Saturday at Dunsmuir Junior High School.

Lansdowne, the defending champion, Cedar Hill and Colquitz will represent Victoria in the Island tourney which gets under way at 3:45 p.m. Friday.

Former Sgt.-Major of the army William Wooldridge, the first man to hold that rank, and two other defendants entered pleas of guilty to charges of conspiracy to defraud.

They had been scheduled for trial in federal district court in Los Angeles. The pleas were entered after a day and a half of negotiations between defence attorneys and prosecutors.

Wooldridge, 50, was one of a group of former officials of servicemen's clubs in Vietnam indicted two years ago on 21 counts.

Wooldridge retired from the army in February, 1972. He had been in the army 30 years. At the time charges were first aired against him he was the army's top-ranking enlisted man.

Wooldridge and the others were accused of taking payoffs from merchants, salesmen and entertainment booking agencies; "skimming" profits from pinball and slot machine operations; profiteering in currency exchange; illegal importing and exporting; embezzling thousands of dollars from servicemen's clubs they managed in Vietnam.

MIAMI — A U.S. federal court jury convicted Meyer Lansky of contempt, giving the justice department a victory in the opening round of its prosecution of the wizened little man accused of being the underworld's top money manipulator. Lansky, 70, watched without emotion as the jury of eight women and four men delivered its verdict. The contempt charge grew out of Lansky's failure to answer the subpoena of a grand jury investigating gambling here in 1971.

Hints of Class Warfare in U.K. Strikes

'Working-Class Scum!'

LONDON (CP) — The old British spirit of the blitz flagged and degenerated into hints of class warfare as the country creaked and groaned under a national rail strike.

"You're scum!" the irate, bowler hatted commuter shouted at the impassive train driver. "Working-class scum! What about us, the people who pay your wages? Scum, scum, scum!"

As an Essex commuter crowd gathered a few days ago, another voice was raised: "They should be hanged, the whole bloody lot of them, all the working-class layabouts."

The voices expressed frayed nerves as strikes against wage freezes spread, halting train traffic and closing schools across Britain Wednesday. Cooking and other home comforts were hit by a continued slowdown by gas workers.

"There's no point in testing," said the weary telephone operator when a caller pleaded for help on a constantly-busy London number. "A lot of offices have just left the receivers off because of staff shortages."

In Manchester, four female civil servants paraded in panties and bras in cold weather to demonstrate their claim that they can't buy clothes on their pay.

In the West Midlands, two universities, 325 schools, 32 big hotels and 39 taverns closed, the latest victims of the various stoppages. In the northwest of England 650 business premises found they had no heat.

The enigmatic remark reflected one aspect of the 24-hour rail drivers' strike which paralysed the country's passenger trains Wednesday and gave London the worst traffic jams in memory. The chamber of commerce estimated almost one-third of central London's 1.5 million workers just stayed home without attempting the battle to offices and stores.

Some banks operated with skeleton staffs. West end stores said both staff and customers were reduced by 30 per cent.

Many workers who did struggle in, hanging on heavily-laden buses and jammed, infrequent subways, were more than two hours late. Homebound bus queues formed in the early afternoon.

London's streets were choked with traffic.

"Hell on wheels," said the automobile associaton of traffic jams, some more than 10 miles long, snarling the city and outlying towns.

"A hell of a time," a London newspaper told readers in reporting the chaos and an approaching crisis for hospitals and auto plants.

Meanwhile in France, airline pilots began a two-day strike Wednesday and said they now have received backing from American pilots in their refusal to fly in France so long as military technicians stay in French control towers.

The strike is running concurrently with a walkout by civilian tower personnel. The strikes unrelated but many pilots have refused to fly since Monday when the military took over civilian aviation movements in an effort to break the controllers' strike. The French Airline Pilots Association considers the use of the military dangerous.

Parole, Pen Riot Reports Coming

OTTAWA (CP) — Solicitor-General Warren Allmand is reported preparing to release, possibly as early as Thursday, one of two potentially controversial reports.

The report was drawn up by a committee headed by J. William Swackhammer who investigated the 1971 riot that resulted in two deaths at Kingston penitentiary.

The report has been in the hands of the solicitor-general's department since before the Oc. 30 federal election.

The then solicitor-general, Jean-Pierre Goyer, refused to release it. There was speculation it could have become a political issue in the election campaign.

Mr. Allmand is also preparing to release the second report at a later date.

It deals with the leave system and paroles in the penitentiary service.

Both reports are expected to have some influence on MPs' deliberations on Mr. Allmand's bill to extend the partial ban on capital punishment.

Some MPs feel that capital punishment can be abolished altogether if there is assurance for Canadians that killers will be held in prison for prolonged terms and if the public has confidence in the penitentiaries service.

The paroles-leave report was produced by Judge James K. Hugessen of the Superior Court of Quebec.

Fume Leak Emergency, 6,000 Flee

AUCKLAND (Reuter) — The New Zealand government declared parts of Auckland an emergency area Tuesday after a leakage of chemical fumes forced the evacuation of 6,000 persons and sent nearly 300 to hospitals for treatment.

A day after discovery of the leakage from the cargo of a Cypriot freighter in Auckland harbor, masked firemen fighting to control the fumes were thwarted by a wind change.

It swept the sickly-smelling gas into the nearby Parnell area, forcing hundreds of people to evaucate homes, shops, offices and factories.

Police crew cordons around the suburb, which adjoins the city centre, and patrolled the empty streets in case of looting.

So far, about 280 persons have needed hospital treatment for severe headaches, muscular pains and vomiting caused by the fumes. No deaths have been reported.

The gas has escaped from damaged drums of agricultural defoliant being shipped to Australia from Mexico. They received a battering when the freighter, the Good Navigator, ran into bad weather and put in at Auckland.

The 12 drums, which carried notices declaring the contents not dangerous, were unloaded when the leaks were discovered.

Addicts Use Doctors

Disciplinary Action

OTTAWA (CP)—Many doctors are being used as sources of drug supply by addicts and pushers, says a Halifax drug crisis intervention group.

Halifax Interaction, a medical aid service staffed by doctors, nurses and street workers trying to help young people on drugs, described in a brief some of the abuses in which doctors are involved, either wittingly or unwittingly.

The brief said the medical profession was involved "as heavily . . . as are the dealers who are pushing illicit drugs."

The group presented its case to the Nova Scotia Medical Society last November and the brief is reprinted in the current issue of the Canadian Medical Association Journal.

In an accompanying statement, the magazine said appropriate disciplinary action has been taken on cases in Halifax.

Some doctors had been threatened with violence and some had been blackmailed into providing drugs, it said.

"At the same time, however, we feel that some doctors do prescribe to addicts because it is more convenient to do so than to provide or generate proper forms of treatment or because it is financially feasible to do so."

Editor Doug Geekie said in the cases investigated in Halifax, one doctor had been involved innocently, but others, against whom disciplinary action was taken, had known what was going on.

Users and pushers find they can often get drugs more easily and more cheaply from doctors than from illegal sources, the brief said.

"Once a user has discovered the ins and outs of obtaining a drug from one doctor, he will often go to a number of doctors, sometimes using different names, to build up a supply of drugs for himself and his friends and for sale on the street."

The Interaction group followed up some of the patients who had dropped out of treatment programs only to find these addicts now were obtaining supplies from doctors.

On checking, the group found one doctor was prescribing suspicously large amounts of morphine daily for three patients.

Another doctor was reported to have sold prescriptions for morphine for $200 each, the brief said.

Barge May Stay Sunk

OTTAWA (CP) — Transport Minister Jean Marchand said Wednesday his department is investigating whether it would be ecologically safer to leave a barge loaded with a million gallons of oil at the bottom of the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

He said in a written reply technical information now gathered favors the leaving of the barge Irving Whale in an undisturbed state at the bottom of the gulf north of Prince Edward Island.

The Whale sank in 1970.

Marchand, responding to a question on the Commons order paper, said tenders submitted to raise the Whale were rejected.

They were too costly and gave no guarantee that the vessel would not break up after it was raised.

Train Derailed On CN Mainline

ZUMBRO, Sask. (CP) — An eatbound freight train carrying sulphuc and propane was derailed on the Canadian National Railways mainline near this community.

About 25 cars went off the tracks, forcing rerouting of all CN Eastbound passenger and express trains, said Mike Williams, CN public relations manager in Edmonton. The line is expected to re-open Friday.

Nurse Judith Hill

By JOHN DODD

YELLOWKNIFE (CP) — An RCMP inspector testified Wednesday night that pilot Martin Hartwell, who thought he was dying from lack of food after 23 days in the Arctic wilderness, said he ate the flesh of nurse Judith Hill, who already was dead.

Inspector Stanley Venner of Edmonton told a coroner's inquest that he spoke with Hartwell after the pilot was rescued following a 32-day ordeal.

He said he asked the following question:

"Did you eat or consume the flesh of Judy Hill?"

The inspector said the 46-year-old pilot replied:

"Yes. Nobody else did. David did not, because I started eating flesh after David was dead."

He was referring to David Kootook, a 14-year-old Eskimo boy put on Hartwell's plane at Cambridge Bay along with nurse Hill and Neemee Nulliayok, believed to be in premature labor.

Miss Hill died shortly after the crash while Mrs. Nulliayok died five hours later. The boy survived for 23 days.

Inspector Venner also read a statement signed by Hartwell. The statement said Hartwell wanted to die along with the Eskimo boy.

"But after David was dead, the will to live was reawakened," the statement said.

"I crawled out of the tent, got my crutches and stumbled to the nearest tree where I expected there would be lichens. I was completely exhausted, with aching feet, trembling from exhaustion and pain.

"I chopped off the lower branches, tucked them under my arm and crawled on my knees back to the tent."

The statement said this short trip took Hartwell two hours.

"I recognized that I could not continue . . .

"I made soup of the lichens, no more than a spoonful.

"I knew that since I could not get enough lichens to live, I could not make it to the lake to get fish."

"I needed food to fill the gap," until his legs improved.

"From here on, I think it is clear to everyone what I did. I'm still trying to forget this

Budget Approved

Liberals Win Crucial Vote

OTTAWA (CP) — The Commons approved Finance Minister John Turner's budget of tax cuts and pension increases by a vote of 143 to 102 Wednesday, giving the minority Liberal government a crucial vote of confidence in its fiscal and economic policies.

The vote, which endorsed the budget in principle, passed with New Democrat and Social Credit members supporting the government at the conclusion of a six-day debate.

One Social Credit member, Heni Latulippe (Compton), joined 101 Conservatives in opposing the budget, which proposes, among other things, higher old-age pensions and veterans' allowances, personal income tax cuts, reduced tariffs on a variety of imports and removal of federal sales tax from a list of items.

Standings in the 264-seat House are: Liberal 109, Conservative 107, New Democrat 31, Social Credit 15 and Independents, two.

Roch LaSallee (Ind. Joliette) joined the 104 Liberals, 28 New Democrats and 10 Social Creditors who voted for the budget. Eighteen MPs were absent.

Among those missing were Conservative Leader Robert Stanfield, sick with a cold, and External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp, attending the Vietnam conference in Paris.

The Conservatives acknowledged "certain beneficial provisions" in the budget, brought down Feb. 19, but said it would not deal adequately with unemployment or inflation.

The Social Creditors were also critical of the document, but chose to support it on the final vote.

Both the Conservatives and Social Crediters made unsuccessful bids during the debate to topple the government on non-confidence motions, Social Credit last Friday and the Conservatives Monday.

During closing stages of the debate Wednesday, Claude Wagner (PC-St. Hyacinthe) accused the government of selling out Quebecers by bringing in a budget that would be a failure in social terms.

He said Prime Minister Trudeau and the federal cabinet have long prided themselves on the success of the Liberal party in Quebec, yet, "never have so many taken so long to do so little for those they represent."

He also attacked the "New Democratic paradox" for choosing to vote with the government. Referring to NDP Leader David Lewis, he said, "David did not dare face up to the Liberal Goliath."

The government should be aware that the price of NDP support this week in Ottawa would be paid by Liberal candidates in the 74 Quebec federal ridings in the months to come.

Canada Pledges $250,000 Distress Aid to Vietnam

OTTAWA (UPI) — The Canadian government will make a $250,000 cash contribution to help alleviate distress in South and North Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia, External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp announced Wednesday.

Funds will be transferred through the Canadian Red Cross Society to the International Red Cross in Geneva in response to the recent appeal to the international community for $12.5 million in emergency relief assistance, Sharp said in a statement.

Indians, Marshals Swap Shots

PINE RIDGE, S.D. (UPI) — Militant Indians holding 11 "very scared" hostages in the besieged hamlet of Wounded Knee traded gunfire with federal officers Wednesday and fired on automobiles and low-flying planes that dared within rifle or shotgun range.

● Town was scene of dreadful massacre of Indians. Page 9

Two armored personnel carriers were brought into the Pine Ridge reservation by the federal forces while authorities manoeuvered to obtain release of the hostages.

The hostages, all residents of Wounded Knee, were seized when between 200 and 300 members of the American Indian Movement (AIM) occupied a trading post and Catholic church in a coup Tuesday night.

John McArty, an FBI spokesman in Rapid City, 70 miles northwest of Pine Ridge, said no "meaningful meetings" with the militant had been held, but added: "Attemps are being made to reach agreement to have the hostages released."

Sen. James Abourezk, Democrat of South Dakota, said in Washington he had talked by telephone with AIM leader Russell Means at Wounded Knee and told him he was ready to negotiate with the militants if they released the hostages.

Abourezk said he also talked with one of the hostages, Mrs. Agnes Gildersleeve, 71, and "she tells me that all of the hostages are safe and unharmed but . . . they're all very scared."

The embattled Indians demanded that the senate foreign relations committee hold hearings on Indian treaties, that the senate make a "full-scale investigation" of government treatment of Indians and that Abourezk launch an inquiry into "all Sioux reservations in South Dakota."

They vowed they would stay put until they got answers from Washington but said no harm "by Indians" would come to the hostages.

Five Found Dead After Ship Blaze

DARTMOUTH, NS. (CP) — Five crewmembers died when fire broke out aboard the West German trawling factory ship Julius Pickenpack on marine slips here early Wednesday.

Police said the bodies of four crew members were pulled from the charred interior of the 1,564-ton vessel at mid-day. The body of a fifth man was recovered earlier.

Police had said during the morning they had recovered one body and were searching for only one other, but later reported that four bodies were found.

One crewman said in an interview he was awakened about 4:30 a.m. by someone shouting "fire!" He said he scrambled to the bridge and set off a general alarm.

The rest of the 52-man crew was evacuated in various stages of undress shortly after the fire broke out.

Many of them were carried piggyback across a deck and wharf made frigid by temperatures of about five below.

Police set up an aid station in the lobby of a nearby hotel and the Salvation Army brought clothes for the men, most of whom were Portuguese.

Police said the crew quarters and most of the men's belongings were destroyed in the blaze, cause of which had not been determined.

Court Upholds Hanging

VANCOUVER (CP) — The B.C. Court of Appeals Wednesday dismissed the appeal of a man sentenced to be hanged April 10 for the murder of a jail guard.

Oil Pipeline Hearings Set

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate interior committee will begin hearings March 9 on proposed trans-Alaska and trans-Canada oil pipeline legislation, it was learned Wednesday.

Alaska Senators Ted Stevens and Mike Gravel are sponsoring a bill to authorize construction of an 800-mile pipeline to carry oil from the north slope to the ice-free Alaska Gulf port of Valdez.

Sen. Walter Mondale (D — Minn.) has introduced a measure to permit the issuance of interior department permits for a rival pipeline which would move north slope oil through Canada to the north central United States.

Turkish Press Now Censored

ANKARA (UPI) — Military officials have imposed the first press censorship in 103 years by ordering newspapers and news agencies to withhold two paragraphs from a speech condemning censorship.

Newsmen in Ankara and Istanbul said it was impossible to gain approval of their articles in time for publication so they have in effect begun censoring themselves.

Life Advocated For Traffickers

SANTA FE, N.M. (UPI) — The New Mexico state senate voted unanimously Wednesday for mandatory life imprisonment without possibility of parole or suspension for drug peddlers.

One senator called the legislation the "toughest of its kind in the United States." It now goes to the house for consideration.

Bandit Killed, Two Held

QUEBEC CITY (UPI) — Three hooded men armed with elephant guns shot it out with police Wednesday after attempting to hold up an army paymaster's office near the tourist-jammed Winter Carnival. One of the bandidts was killed and another seriously injured.

The third gunman surrendered to the scores of heavily armed officers. One military policeman was slightly injured and two cars damaged, police said.

PoWs Issue Solved: U.S.

PARIS (AP) — State Secretary William Rogers of the United States received unconditional assurances from North Vietnam on Wednesday that it will soon resume releases of American prisoners of war, a U.S. spokesman reported.

At the same time, American and North Vietnamese diplomats headed toward agreement on terms of a declaration to give international backing to the Vietnam peace accord.

In day of hectic backstage diplomacy here, there were also signs to suggest the Vietnamese communists sought and got promises from the Saigon government of greater security for communist peacekeeping delegates in South Vietnam.

The communist side had been expected to release a second group of more than 100 U.S. PoWs early this week in keeping with the Jan. 27 Paris agreement on Vietnam. In holding up the release, the communists claimed the other side was not abiding by the ceasefire and was not providing for the safety of the communist peacekeepers.

By North Vietnamese reckoning, 442 American PoWs remain to be released.

Although a pattern of compromise appeared to have emerged on the prisoner issue, Robert McCloskey, spokesman for the U.S. delegation, emphasized that Rogers had made no bargain with North Vietnam. Rogers was given the North Vietnamese assurances on prisoner releases during a 30-minute session with Foreign Minister Nguyen Duy Trinh, McCloskey said.

As the two were meeting, another conference was taking place — between the foreign ministers of the two rival South Vietnamese regimes, Tran Van Lam of Saigon and Mme. Nguyen Thi Binh of the Viet Cong's Provisional Revolutionary Government. McCloskey said he did not know what was discussed between them.

Chinese Snub B.C. Call

VANCOUVER (CP) — China has refused to send two acupuncturists to B.C. to act as consultants on setting up standards for acupuncture treatment, a B.C. government official said Wednesday.

The invitation was sent by Health Minister Dennis Cocke to Yao Kuang, Chinese ambassador to Canada. It asked China to send one or two doctors trained in acupuncture to work for several months at Vancouver General Hospital.

Clayton Perry, Cocke's executive assistant, said the Chinese refused because they are concerned that many North Americans have "fantastic expectations on acupuncture."

Foreman Wins Fantastic Prize

LONDON (AP) — James Wood, a 56-year-old building foreman, won more than $1.3 million on the soccer pool Wednesday — the biggest sum ever won by one man.

He immediately thought of his hobby, fishing.

"I shall buy my own private stretch of river, somewhere where there is plenty of salmon," he said as he arrived in London to receive his cheque.

The actual prize was £542,252 or $1,328,517. Wood filled up a row of entries costing a total of one pound or $2.40.

He got the fantastic prize to himself because he was the only one among millions of bettors who picked up eight games ending in draws in British soccer last Saturday.

The previous record for one man was £512,000 or $1,228,800.

On Bilingualism

By RICHARD JACKSON
Colonist Bureau

OTTAWA — Prime Minister Trudeau promises to make it difficult for some members of the opposition when the government brings a hard and clear-cut resolution on bilingualism before the Commons.

With his resolution, he said Wednesday in an interview taped with Montreal newspaperwoman Solange Chaput-Rolland, he will compel all members of Parliament but especially those of the opposition — to take a firm, unequivocal stand on the issue.

In this way, he went on, he will make it impossible for some opposition mnembers again to go before the electorate — presumably at the next election — to take "ambiguous" positions on bilingualism.

He accused these unidentified members of the opposition of having said the opposed only the "excesses," as they termed them, of bilingualism, and not the question of the two official languages itself.

But, he charged, it was bilingualism alone that they really opposed.

His resolution, he went on in the interview, would force these un-named MPs out from cover.

They would have to take a clear position — for or against bilingualism in such a way that there could be no room later to manoeuvre around it with qualifying "ifs" and "buts".

Then the prime minister made a second disclosure.

Among the reasons he had decided to remain as prime minister — and he specified only this one — had been to be in a position to pursue and clarify the bilingual issue.

This was the first word, at least from the prime minister himself, that he ever had any other intention than doing what he could to remain in power.

In the throne speech, the government spoke of a resolution on bilingualism, together with guidelines, that would be coming before the house this session.

But the throne speech gave no hint that it would be such a "hard" resolution, compelling all MPs to stand up and be counted in such a way as to preclude any future running for cover behind qualifications.

Health Unit Kept Busy

By RUTH McKELLAR
Colonist Correspondent

COURTENAY — There was a significant rise in the number of venereal disease cases in the area served by the Upper island health unit, according to the annual report.

There were 143 cases reported compared to 91 the previous year. The report says "The cause of this increase can only be speculated at this time."

Diseases of the heart, blood vessels and cancer continued to head the list of deaths, with 88 dying from heart conditions, 52 from disease of blood vessels, 61 from cancer and 53 from accidents. Infant deaths stood at 12 with 4 stillbirths and 37 were listed as dying from other causes.

Concern

Dr. G. A. Gibson, director of the health unit, said in the report, "communicable diseases are now so well controlled they seldom rouse the public interest as they once did. However, there were 71 cases of hepatitis and 35 cases of other illnesses associated with food. Since these diseases are closely related to environmental sanitation they give rise to some concern."

Routine immunizations were carried out in Grades one, five and 10 against smallpox, polio, diptheria, and tetanus. Rubella vaccinations were given in special age groups and vision screening was done in Grades one, three, five, seven and 10 and in special classes and kindergarten.

Hearing screening was carried out in Grade one and in special classes.

More Visits

The health unit covers care for 15,294 elementary and secondary school children, 963 kindergarten students and 44 retarded students.

The report shows that the home care service is increasing steadily. Last year 3,895 visits were made compared to 2,428 in 1970. This service was aided by community services such as the Red Cross loan cupboard for equipment, homemakers and meals on wheels.

A total of 934 home visits were made which concerned mental and emotional health.

Other services offered by the health unit include a consultant physiotherapist, a division for aid to the handicapped, speech therapy and preventive dentristry.

Inspections

In the field of environmental health, 4,657 inspections were made last year and involved work in the areas of land use, water supplies, administration, pollution, recreation, food services and housing.

At the annual meeting of the Upper Island Union Board of Health, Mrs. Eve Smith was elected chairman and Mrs. Edith McNish, vice-chairman.

School Vandalism $10,000

DUNCAN — School trustees have expressed concern over a report which was released this week on the cost of vandalism to the school district during 1972.

A press release issued by the board placed the cost of vandalism over the school year at nearly $10,000. To help combat the damage being done to the district's schools, the board has urged Cowichan citizens living in the vicinity of school buildings to be alert to the acts of vandalism taking place, and to contact the RCMP should they witness such an occurence.

Trustee Evelyn Paskin suggested multiple use of the schools as a possible deterrent to the increased vandalism. She said schools which are open during the evening are generally subject to fewer acts of vandalism than schools which remain closed except for the regular hours.

Board chairman Gerry Philippson said he had noticed most vandalism takes place over holidays and long weekends, when the schools are closed.

"As a neighbor I might tend to be a little more alert to the problem if I were aware of the cost to the district," he said.

"In the view of the board this amount of money ($9,463.50), was totally wasted, the repairs only returning the schools to their original condition," stated the press release.

The total was up $2,000 from the previous year, which was accredited to the fact the school district has been enlarged. It was also pointed out the larger portion of vandalism had taken place in the northern section of the district. Schools which were isolated were also the target of attacks by vandals.

Heaviest-damaged school during the year was Mount Prevost junior high, with over $1,100 damage being sustained. Other schools which were also heavily damaged were George Bonner, Quamichan, and Chemainus junior high schools, and Tansor and Mount Brenton elementary schools.

The school board has offered a $100 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of any persons caught damaging school property in an attempt to create more public awareness of the problem.

Diphtheria Cases Put in Isolation

PORT ALICE (CP) — Two new suspected diphtheria cases were isolated here Wednesday.

Dr. D. G. Morris, the resident doctor, said further tests at provincial labs in Vancouver will determine whether the two are confirmed cases.

He said Diane Lundin, 10, the first person to contract diptheria here in more than 30 years is recovering well.

Morris said more than 150 swab tests have been taken and more are being done daily. He said 370 children have been inoculated and more injections are being carried out at Port McNeil high school to bring the total to 500.

The head of the Duncan detachment said so far 10 bicycles have been turned in. All were found at Duncan and surrounding areas.

Development Plans

Islands Study Encompasses Eight Districts

All regional districts whose jurisdictions include islands lying between Vancouver Island and the Mainland will be invited to make presentations to the Legislature's Municipal Affairs Committee studying the question of Gulf Islands development. The committee decided Wednesday that its recommendations should be applicable to all the small islands along the coast, not just to the little group known formally as the Gulf Islands.

Later, committee chairman Alfred Nunweiler (NDP—Fort George) said he expected the study to take longer than the currect session of the Legislature. If the house approved, it might go on for close to a year, he said.

He hoped the committee would tour several of the Gulf Islands, at least one in some detail, he said, getting to know what conditions there now were really like and what problems the Islands were facing.

The committee would also be receiving briefs from the regional districts, and also from any other groups that cared to submit them. It had already received a request from the Capital Region, asking to have its two Gulf Island directors appear before the committee, and other regional districts involved would be contacted.

If all the islands between the mainland and Vancouver are taken into account, there are eight regional districts involved — Capital, Comox-Strathcona, Cowichan, Nanaimo, Mount Waddington, Greater Vancouver, Sunshine Coast and Powell River.

The suggestion to extend the committee's terms of reference to include all the islands came from Karen Sanford (NDP—Comox) who noted that islands in her riding, such as Quadra and Cortes, were involved in development problems.

Contractors Win Bid For Injunction

By RODNEY WADE
Colonist Correspondent

PORT ALBERNI — Trouble usually comes in threes. And Wednesday the IWA discovered the truth of this statement.

First off, three local asssociations of truck loggers and owner-operators were successful in their attempt to get an injunction against the IWA and MacMillan Bloedel, a truck logger's representative said.

Tom Fisher, secretary-manager of the Western Independant Truck Logger's Association said he was informed by Clifford Coulson, director of the association who was in Vancouver, that the owner-operators had been successful in their attempt to gain injunctions against the IWA and the company.

"This means the IWA and its offices will have to adhere to the terms of their master agreement with the company and go back to work. I also presume, said Fisher, that MacMillan Bloedel will lift the 'forcemajeur' clause that they the owner-operators. This instituted and invoked against means that, hopefully, our members will now go back to work this morning."

Fisher said that he thought it unlikely that the IWA would walk out again in light of the injunction.

"I can't quite see the IWA being that foolish and flying in the face of an injunction of this nature. However it is possible that they will do so. And if they do, then we will have to seek legal advice again.

"However, barring any unusual circumstances, we will be back on the job today. This period has put considerable strain on the pockets of the owner-operators."

The dispute began two weeks ago when the owner-operators refused to sign a memorandum of agreement that would, among other things, have obliged operators to pay to the union a fee equal to union dues yet without the return of union benefits.

There has been no comment as yet from union officials.

However, with president of the IWA local 1-85, Earl Foxcroft, still at the court hearings in Vancouver, local boom men failed to turn up for the afternoon shift at Somass mill. Union treasurer John Squire was unable to ascertain the reason for the walkout late last night. The mill lacking a sufficient supply of logs was shut down at 6:15 p.m.

Meanwhile harking back to another controversy in which the IWA has recently been embroiled, the Canadian president of the Pulp and Paper Workers of Canada said that it could be a few weeks before the vote is called at Somass mill.

Fred Mullin said that the PPWC applied for certification at the mill on Feb. 15 but the labor relations board had not yet set a vote date.

In attempting to gain certification, the PPWC were accused of raiding by the local IWA who presently represent the Somass workers. The Canadian union already represents workers at the saw mill and pulp mill in Mackenzie.

This would make the seventh application for certification by the PPWC so far this year. The seven applications represent 5 saw mills, 2 pulp mills and 17,000 workers.

An oil spill near Bellingham, Wash., by Wednesday evening had broken into a number of patches is too thinly spread to be cleaned up by equipment, and should be dispersed by the tide, according to U.S. Coast Guard officials.

The spill was first reported 7:30 a.m. Wednesday as a thin spill about seven miles long off the west coast of Lummi Island which is nine miles southwest of Bellingham.

Coast Guard helicopters which surveyed the area found at least eight separate patches of light oil between Alden Bank, northwest of Lummi Island, and Eliza Island, off the south tip of Lummi.

A Coast Guard spokesman said the oil was in "thin sheens" — so thin that it was difficult to take samples.

The thickest patch was south of Eliza Island and the Washington state department of ecology earlier made preparations to clear it up. However the oil proved too thin and the idea was abandoned.

Because the patches are so thin they will be dissipated by tidal action, he said. The general tidal flow in the area is south so there is little danger of the oil spreading to Canadian waters, he said.

A lot of shipping moves through the area and it is probable that the oil came from a vessel but no culprit has been found, said the spokesman.

Ostomy: Can Strike Newborn Baby or 95-Year-Old

No Restrictions to Life—Unless Self-Imposed

By CLAUDE ADAMS
Colonist Reporter

It is variously called the last taboo, the operation nobody talks about, one of most psychologically jolting physical problems that one can imagine.

A full-grown adult must cope with the fact that he or she no longer has control over a vital part of the body. There is no real cure.

Without therapy and special attention, the person will often withdraw from society, worried about his employment prospects, his family and his sexual functions.

It can strike a newborn baby, or a man of 95.

The problem is a disease of the bowel or bladder that leaves the sufferer powerless to control the excretion of bodily wastes. The operation is called an ostomy, and it is estimated that 150 such operations are performed in Victoria every year.

The operation consists of removing the diseased part of the bladder or bowel, and rerouting waste through a canal leading out of the body over the stomach. The ostomate wears a plastic bag at all times.

Registered Nurse Aileen Barer, herself an ostomate and only one of two enterostomal therapists in B.C., reckons that Vancouver Island alone has more than 1,000 ostomates.

And the little-known Island Ostomy Association is trying to bring as many of them together as possible to restore a little spark into their social lives.

The association has only 44 members at the present time, but it is holding its first meeting outside Victoria on Sunday, at Nanaimo Regional Hospital.

In a recent interview, Mrs. Barer, a mother of five, talked abut the immediate psychological consequences of the operation and her unique role as a comforter and counsellor to ostomates.

"We are all brought up to regard toilet training and being clean as a major thing. Imagine then, an adult hearing from his doctor that he has lost proper bowel or bladder function.

"That's why it's such a traumatic thing, equal in trauma to that of a woman having a breast removed."

She calls an ostomy "an altered means of elimination" but for many people terrified of embarrassment, it becomes an altered life.

The disease can hit a young married person, as it did Mrs. Barer at age 29, with "very debilitating" effects on ones mental and physical well-being.

"And then there are the older people who, if they leave the hospital with no knowledge and poor appliances, become recluses."

Knowledge and proper appliances. These are the tools of Mrs. Barer's trade as she makes her regular rounds among ostomates, young and old, in Victoria.

Her message, and that of the association, is: You can live a full and proper life. Look, there is even a football player in the city who has undergone an ostomy.

Mrs. Barer said interest in ostomal therapy has increased as a result of the Vietnam war. Veterans are returning with shattered bodies, many of them with damaged bladder function, and pressure is growing for more therapy training schools.

One of her success stories is a 28-year-old girl who fell from a tree and was paralysed from the waist down. She persevered, and recently earned a BA in psychology.

The ostomate faces a life of carrying the plastic bag outside the body, and this results in worried questions about the possibility of marriage and childbirth, continued physical activity, sex, holding down a job, and special diets.

"But there are no restrictions to life unless they want to put retrictions themselves," she said. "There is a convention once a year, and last time, 840 ostomates from all over the world — Australia, Hawaii and Canada — came together.

Mrs. Baerer had her operation in 1962, and she was "appalled" at the lack of knowledge among nurses. It was still very much a taboo subject, and a taboo implies ignorance.

She brought the matter to the attention of local surgeons, and three years later had set up a complete pre- and post-operative service. She counsels other ostomates and their families, recommends and orders appliances for them and brings many back to a normal social life.

Ambulance Service 'Urgently Required'

By FRED CURRIE
Colonist Correspondent

NANAIMO — A comprehensive ambulance service to cover the entire central Vancouver Island health unit area is urgently required, according to a report issued by the health unit.

The report, issued in conjunction with the health board's annual report, says such a service could be financed through subsidies through the three regional districts which lie within the health unit area of jurisdiction.

The regions include Cowichan-Malahat, Nanaimo and Alberni-Clayoquot. The Nanaimo regional district now subsidizes the local ambulance service which operates within the boundaries of Nanaimo school district.

"With the advent of standards for vehicles and personnel, a professional, 24-hour-a-day service of radio-operated ambulances would greatly improve the level of health care," the report says.

At present, many of the areas in the health unit are served by volunteer ambulance service with limited facilities and limited numbers of vehicles available.

Such a service, the report adds, would make the larger hospitals in Port Alberni, Nanaimo and Duncan, with the larger facilities and specialist physicians, more available to the population of outlying areas.

Also, it says, a more realistic appraisal of the necessity of maintaining expensive acute care beds in Chemainus and Ladysmith could then be made.

The report, prepared by health unit director Dr. Peter Reynolds, also suggests that inter-hospital transfer of patients should be included in the provincially-operated health plan.

"All too often, both the ambulance operator and attending nurses end up losing money on these emergency transportation situations, particularly in instances where the patient dies or when it was not possible to enter into a contract in advance."

Reynolds said inclusion in the medical plan would also eliminate the large bills for ambulance and nurse's care which now fall on the shoulders of patients or relatives.

The report also includes the results of a survey conducted in the area by the health centre staff.

It shows that the consumer off-health services is unhappy about several aspects of general health care. Among them are long waits in doctors' offices, despite appointment systems, lack of house calls in cases of children with infectious diseases and care of the elderly. And, it adds, the consumer dislikes being transferred from one health agency to another.

Amalgamation Motion Removed from Table

DUNCAN — Ald. Ken Paskin at Monday night's city council meeting had little luck with a motion regarding amalgamation between the North Cowichan municipality and the city of duncan.

In his motion, Paskin suggested that the Duncan city council should state that it would be in favor of total amalgamation and to ask for a meeting with North Cowichan council to bring about the merger.

There was no seconder for the motion and it was "removed from the table." Except for Ald. Martin Lukaitis, all city council members were present when Paskin introduced his motion. At a previous council he had given a notice of motion regarding the same matter but at that time Mayor Jim Quaife ruled it out of order.

Quaife two weeks ago told Paskin that he had to rule the notice of motion out of order because the question of amalgamation was being studied by the city's development committee. The mayor said after the meeting that as soon as the committee has submitted its report council will make its final decision regarding amalgamation.

Last Wednesday North Cowichan council unanimously agreed with a motion by Ald. John Cannon that North Cowichan would be in favor of total amalgamation with Duncan, but would be opposed to partial amalgamation.

In other business Monday night city council unanimously supported the proposed establishment of an activity centre under the jurisdiction of the Cowichan Valley Regional Board and gave third readings to bylaws — one of which will designate Craig Street as a one-way street from Government to Ingram and the other which will clear the way for drainage work for the Centennial Height subdivision area.

Duncan Artist Submits Entries

DUNCAN — Semi-abstract sculpture-Hanoi is one of three entries Duncan artist Dorothy Dunn submitted to this year's Ceramics International which will draw work from the world's finest sculptors and potters to Calgary this summer.

This year's Ceramics International is the first ever to be held on the American continent. It is being held under the auspices of the International Academy of Ceramics and of the Alberta Potters' Association. Last year the international show was held in London, England, and in more previous years it took place at Istanbul, Geneva and Prague.

Other entries of Mrs. Dunn include a series of small clay figures depicting various fashions and another semi-abstract sculpture — nativity. "I have tried all my life to find out what I can do. I tried painting, and fashion designing and finally I found that working with clay gave me the greatest satisfaction and joy," Mrs. Dunn said.

Trustee Bind Baffles Saanich Board

'Straw' Vote Puzzler

When John Pennington decided last year not to continue as a Saanich district school trustee, he couldn't have possibly known the trouble he was starting.

One possible candidate popped up in search of the vacant seat. But he failed to meet the qualifications necessary to run for office and that meant the Saanich school board headed into 1973 with six instead of seven trustees.

The next step was to appeal to prospective candidates with an advertisement. That was done and the board found itself with no less than five.

After that is was just a matter of waiting for instructions from the provincial education department. Seemed simple enough until the board got a letter from an aide to Education Minister Eileen Dailly suggesting a "straw vote" be taken. The results were to be forwarded to the department.

The board wanted to know what was meant by a straw vote but the answer it got from the department didn't quite make this clear, according to board chairman Mrs. Rubymay Parrott.

At a board meeting Monday night she wondered if the district wasn't being asked to conduct a "pseudo" vote. Checking into Saanich records, she found a vote on some of a questionnaire sent out with water bills. other matter was one conducted in the form

Education Expert:

Survival in City: That's the Lesson

By BARBARA McLINTOCK
Colonist Reporter

"The city is the curriculum. That's what you've got to learn because that's what you've got to live in."

That's John Bremer talking, an internationally-known educator who over the next three years may have as much effect on the public education system in B.C. as any man in the province.

Bremer has been appointed by Education Minister Eileen Dailly to head two commissions on education. One will study the future directions of the public school system in the province, the other the post-secondary education system.

Quitting Halifax

Bremer was in Victoria Tuesday, and talked about some of his ideas on where education in general, and in B.C. in particular, might go.

He will return to B.C. in about a week's time to take up his duties full-time after he finishes tidying up at Dalhousie University in Halifax where he is currently senior Killam fellow.

He was reluctant Tuesday to make suggestions as to what might come from the commissions' work, because, he said, that would depend on the feelings of the public that were discovered.

Community Role

The commissions would really be the community, he suggested, and their results would be the product of interaction between the commission and the public.

"It depends on where the people are in their own thinking," said Bremer. He felt it was important that the process of change, and indeed of education, must begin "where the student already is," though it need not necessarily end there.

Complicated Change

The process of educational change, he said, was a very complicated one. "It's not a simple and superficial thing that can be done by having six new goals listed in alphabetical order."

The changes couldn't just be legislated, he said. It was a matter of changing and developing attitudes. The community at large, and especially those charged with implementing the changes — the educators — must understand well and support whatever changes are being made.

Plan as You Go

He thinks that one of the new processes in social change is that "a plan isn't something that you lay down in advance of the activity," so he hasn't made yet any detailed plans for the work of the commissions.

"We're not so much concerned with creating a plan for the improvement of education in British Columbia; we're concerned with improving education in British Columbia, and that's a very big difference."

Continuous Reform

He hopes the commissions will lead to "continuous and progressive reform" and particularly to an examination of alternatives within the education system.

It is more important that some problems be dealt with and some conclusions reached about them than what those conclusions are, he said.

There are two particular forces now operating in society that he feels must be faced by the education system. These are the knowledge explosion, the tremendous amount of information being generated and developed; and the development of different types of media for communicating information.

To date these forces have not been reflected in the educational program, he said, but he felt that "we have to respond to these forces . . the commission has to come to grips with them."

It might even be, he said, that a whole other model for looking at the educational system should be used. He compared the present model to an organ within the human body serving a specialized function in that "we have set up education in concentrated centres."

Nervous System

He suggested another possible model might be one in which education was the body's nervous system "which goes to every single part of the body."

His own goal in education, he said, was "to help students to learn skills by which they can take control of their lives and be responsible for themselves." But what skills these were and how to teach them were very complicated matters, he added.

Meaningful Part

He believed, he said, in representative government, and in "people participating meaningfully in their own political lives." But this didn't mean that children should be allowed to do whatever they wanted, he emphasized. "Freedom requires discipline."

Bremer, a quiet-spoken Englishman, said he believed the educational climate in B.C. was "hopeful." There were people in the system who were already thinking in terms of change, and over-all he felt the system was "in a good place from which to begin a journey."

Life's Work

He had, he said, spent most of his life working towards the reform of education, and he felt that by chairing B.C.'s commissions, he had an unequalled opportunity in this field.

What the province can accomplish is what has been accomplished nowhere else, he said.

Bremer, 45, will be paid $28,000 a year on a contract basis while he chairs the commissions. His first term is for three years.

Mrs. Dailly said she will name the other members of the commissions in a week or 10 days. These will likely be rotated during the three-year period so there is continually new blood on the commissions, she said.

Music Program Plans Started

The current season of programs offered by the Victoria Symphony Society is far from over. It will run, in fact, into late May with a final series of three pops concerts at Memorial Arena, including an appearance by Mitch Miller.

Nonetheless, members of the society's board of directors were given a preliminary glimpse during their meeting Tuesday night at next year's program. Some of it, said conductor Laszlo Gati, is still tentative, but some is firm.

Definitely coming is the celebrated pianist Van Cliburn. He will appear with the symphony orchestra in a pair of concerts Nov. 7 and 8.

Earlier, on Oct. 21 and 22, Victoria pianist Lynn Hendry, who has been winning laurels in concerts elsewhere, will share a program with two other CBC Talent Festival winners, soprano Anna Chornodousica and violinist Malcolm Low. Miss Hendry will also present a recital Oct. 25.

A special prentation Nov. 25 and 26 will be the Canadian folk-dance group, Les Feux Follets. This group, which performed at Expo 67 in Montreal and Expo 70 in Japan, has been seen twice in Victoria, to great acclaim.

Its numbers include two Victorians — Bill Hosie and Dan Costain.

On Jan. 20 and 21 the Royal Winnipeg Ballet will be seen again, and on Feb. 18 the Vienna Choir Boys.

To lend variety, the World's Greatest Jazz Band will play here Dec. 2, bringing not only the old familiar music of the '40s and '50s, but also including in its membership many of the bandsmen who played with the big dance bands of those decades.

Tentative though much of the program is, these appear definite and others will be announced as soon as they are confirmed.

Arctic Waters Need Charts

Canada must begin the immense task of charting Arctic waters for navigation before American supertanker traffic leads to a "very serious situation," says a top Canadian hydrographer.

At the present time, said Adam Kerr in an interview, commercial ships feeding U.S. gas exploration projects are plying Arctic waters in a somewhat haphazard fashion.

And, hopefully, it will not require a major spill to make the Canadian government sit up and take notice, he added.

Kerr, with the Canadian Hydrographic Service in the Ontario-based central region, was in Victoria to attend a CHS conference at Newcombe Auditorium and will present a paper today on planning for future surveys in the Arctic.

He said less than 25 per cent of the entire Arctic area is adequately charted "for the types of ships that will be going up there."

Kerr admitted that traffic now is fairly slow. In the "high point" of activity around Eureka Sound, for example, only about 10 commercial ships, four icebreakers and a handful of survey ships are working.

But he pointed to the 350,000-ton supertankers already in operation, the half-million ton vessels on the drawing boards and the million-ton giants that are being discussed.

Nurse Judith Hill

By JOHN DODD

YELLOWKNIFE (CP) — An RCMP inspector testified Wednesday night that pilot Martin Hartwell, who thought he was dying from lack of food after 28 days in the Arctic wilderness, said he ate the flesh of nurse Judith Hill, who already was dead.

Inspector Stanley Venner of Edmonton told a coroner's inquest that he spoke with Hartwell after the pilot was rescued following a 32-day ordeal.

He said he asked the following question:

"Did you eat or consume the flesh of Judy Hill?"

The inspector said the 46-year-old pilot replied:

"Yes. Nobody else did. David did not, because I started eating flesh after David was dead."

He was referring to David Kootook, a 14-year-old Eskimo boy put on Hartwell's plane at Cambridge Bay along with nurse Hill and Neemee Nulliayok, believed to be in premature labor.

Miss Hill died shortly after the crash while Mrs. Nulliayok died five hours later. The boy survived for 23 days.

Inspector Venner also read a statement signed by Hartwell. The statement said Hartwell wanted to die along with the Eskimo boy.

"But after David was dead, the will to live was reawakened," the statement said.

"I crawled out of the tent, got my crutches and stumbled to the nearest tree where I expected there would be lichens. I was completely exhausted, with aching feet, trembling from exhaustion and pain.

"I chopped off the lower branches, tucked them under my arm and crawled on my knees back to the tent."

The statement said this short trip took Hartwell two hours.

"I recognized that I could not continue . . .

"I made soup of the lichens, no more than a spoonful.

"I needed food to fill the gap," until his legs improved.

"From here on, I think it is clear to everyone what I did. I'm still trying to forget this

Budget Approved

Liberals Win Crucial Vote

OTTAWA (CP) — The Commons approved Finance Minister John Turner's budget of tax cuts and pension increases by a vote of 143 to 102 Wednesday, giving the minority Liberal government a crucial vote of confidence in its fiscal and economic policies.

The vote, which endorsed the budget in principle, passed with New Democrat and Social Credit members supporting the government at the conclusion of a six-day debate.

One Social Credit member, Henri Latulippe (Compton), joined 101 Conservatives in opposing the budget, which proposes, among other things, higher old-age pensions and veterans' allowances, personal income tax cuts, reduced tariffs on a variety of imports and removal of federal sales tax from a list of items.

Standings in the 264-seat House are: Liberal 109, Conservative 107, New Democrat 31, Social Credit 15 and Independents, two.

Roch LaSallee (Ind. Joliette) joined the 104 Liberals, 28 New Democrats and 10 Social Crediters who voted for the budget. Eighteen MPs were absent.

Among those missing were Conservative leader Robert Stanfield, sick with a cold, and External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp, attending the Vietnam conference in Paris.

The Conservatives acknowledged "certain beneficial provisions" in the budget, brought down Feb. 19, but said it would not deal adequately with unemployment or inflation.

The Social Crediters were also critical of the document, but chose to support it on the final vote.

Both the Conservatives and Social Crediters made unsuccessful bids during the debate to topple the government on non-confidence motions, Social Credit last Friday and the Conservatives Monday.

During closing stages of the debate Wednesday, Claude Wagner (PC-St. Hyacinthe) accused the government of selling out Quebecers by bringing in a budget that would be a failure in social terms.

He said Prime Minister Trudeau and the federal cabinet have long prided themselves on the success of the Liberal party in Quebec, yet, "never have so many taken so long to do so little for those they represent."

He also attacked the "New Democratic paradox" for choosing to vote with the government. Referring to NDP leader David Lewis, he said, "David did not dare face up to the Liberal Goliath."

The government should be aware that the price of NDP support this week in Ottawa would be paid by Liberal candidates in the 74 Quebec federal ridings in the months to come.

Labor Minister John Munro speaker of the day, said Wagner was long on colorful rhetoric but short on specifics.

Canada Pledges $250,000 Distress Aid to Vietnam

OTTAWA (UPI) — The Canadian government will make a $250,000 cash contribution to help alleviate distress in South and North Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia, External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp announced Wednesday.

Funds will be transferred through the Canadian Red Cross Society to the International Red Cross in Geneva in response to the recent appeal to the international community for $12.5 million in emergency relief assistance, Sharp said in a statement.

Indians, Marshals Swap Shots

PINE RIDGE, S.D. (UPI) — Militant Indians holding 11 "very scared" hostages in the besieged hamlet of Wounded Knee traded gunfire with federal officers Wednesday and fired on automobiles and low-flying planes that dared within rifle or shotgun range.

● Town was scene of dreadful massacre of Indians. Page 9

Two armored personnel carriers were brought into the Pine Ridge reservation by the federal forces while authorities manoeuvred to obtain release of the hostages.

The hostages, all residents of Wounded Knee, were seized when between 200 and 300 members of the American Indian Movement (AIM) occupied a trading post and Catholic church in a coup Tuesday night.

John McArty, an FBI spokesman in Rapid City, 70 miles northwest of Pine Ridge, said no "meaningful meetings" with the militant had been held, but added: "Attemps are being made to reach agreement to have the hostages released."

Sen. James Abourezk, Democrat of South Dakota, said in Washington he had talked by telephone with AIM leader Russell Means at Wounded Knee and told him he was ready to negotiate with the militants if they released the hostages.

Abourezk said he also talked with one of the hostages, Mrs. Agnes Gildersleeve, 71, and "she tells me that all of the hostages are safe and unharmed but . . . they're all very scared."

The embattled Indians demanded that the senate foreign relations committee hold hearings on Indian treaties, that the senate make a "full-scale investigation" of government treatment of Indians and that Abourezk launch an inquiry into "all Sioux reservations in South Dakota."

They vowed they would stay put until they got answers from Washington but said no harm "by Indians" would come to the hostages.

Five Found Dead After Ship Blaze

DARTMOUTH, NS. (CP) — Five crew members died when fire broke out aboard the West German trawling factory ship Julius Pickenpack on marine slips here early Wednesday.

Police said the bodies of four crew members were pulled from the charred interior of the 1,564-ton vessel at mid-day. The body of a fifth man was recovered earlier.

Police had said during the morning they had recovered one body and were searching for only one other, but later reported that four bodies were found.

The ship carried a crew of Germans and Portuguese.

One crewman said in an interview he was awakened about 4:30 a.m. by someone shouting "fire!" He said he scrambled to the bridge and set off a general alarm.

"The fire was so strong," he said, "that it took only a minute for the flames to engulf the entire bow area after the alarm was set off."

The rest of the 52-man crew was evacuated in various stages of undress shortly after the fire broke out.

Many of them were carried piggyback across a deck and wharf made frigid by temperatures of about five below.

Police set up an aid station in the lobby of a nearby hotel and the Salvation Army brought clothes for the men, most of whom were Portuguese.

Police said the crew quarters and most of the men's belongings were destroyed in the blaze, cause of which had not been determined.

Turkish Press Now Censored

ANKARA (UPI) — Military officials have imposed the first press censorship in 103 years by ordering newspapers and news agencies to withhold two paragraphs from a speech condemning censorship.

Newsmen in Ankara and Istanbul said it was impossible to gain approval of their articles in time for publication so they have in effect begun censoring themselves.

Life Advocated For Traffickers

SANTA FE, N.M. (UPI) — The New Mexico state senate voted unanimously Wednesday for mandatory life imprisonment without possibility of parole or suspension for drug peddlers.

One senator called the legislation, the "toughest of its kind in the United States." It now goes to the house for consideration.

Bandit Killed, Two Held

QUEBEC CITY (UPI) — Three hooded men armed with elephant guns shot it out with police Wednesday after attempting to hold up an army paymaster's office near the tourist-jammed Winter Carnival. One of the bandidts was killed and another seriously injured.

The third gunman surrendered to the scores of heavily armed officers. One military policeman was slightly injured and two cars damaged, police said.

PoWs Issue Solved: U.S.

PARIS (AP) — State Secretary William Rogers of the United States received unconditional assurances from North Vietnam on Wednesday that it will soon resume releases of American prisoners of war, a U.S. spokesman reported.

At the same time, American and North Vietnamese diplomats headed toward agreement on terms of a declaration to give international backing to the Vietnam peace accord.

In day of hectic backstage diplomacy here, there were also signs to suggest the Vietnamese communists sought and got promises from the Saigon government of greater security for communist peacekeeping delegates in South Vietnam.

The communist side had been expected to release a second group of more than 100 U.S. PoWs early this week in keeping with the Jan. 27 Paris agreement on Vietnam. In holding up the release, the communists claimed the other side was not abiding by the ceasefire and was not providing for the safety of the communist peacekeepers.

By North Vietnamese reckoning, 442 American PoWs remain to be released.

Although a pattern of compromise appeared to have emerged on the prisoner issue, Robert McCloskey, spokesman for the U.S. delegation, emphasized that Rogers had made no bargain with North Vietnam. Rogers was given the North Vietnamese assurances on prisoner releases during a 30-minute session with Foreign Minister Nguyen Duy Trinh, McCloskey said.

As the two were meeting, another conference was taking place between the foreign ministers of the two rival South Vietnamese regimes, Tran Van Lam of Saigon and Mme. Nguyen Thi Binh of the Viet Cong's Provisional Revolutionary Government. McCloskey said he did not know what was discussed between them.

Court Upholds Hanging

VANCOUVER (CP) — The B.C. Court of Appeals Wednesday dismissed the appeal of a man sentenced to be hanged April 10 for the murder of a jail guard.

The five judges dismissed the appeal against conviction for capital murder by Gary McNamara, 20, of Orillia, Ont., who killed jail guard John Starchuk, 55, during a jail break at Alexis Creek, in the B.C. Interior, last June 2.

Oil Pipeline Hearings Set

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate interior committee will begin hearings March 9 on proposed trans-Alaska and trans-Canada oil pipeline legislation, it was learned Wednesday.

Alaska Senators Ted Stevens and Mike Gravel are sponsoring a bill to authorize construction of an 800-mile pipeline to carry oil from the north slope to the ice-free Alaska Gulf port of Valdez.

Sen. Walter Mondale (D — Minn.) has introduced a measure to permit the issuance of interior department permits for a rival pipeline which would move north slope oil through Canada to the north central United States.

Chinese Snub B.C. Call

VANCOUVER (CP) — China has refused to send two acupuncturists to B.C. to act as consultants on setting up standards for acupuncture treatment, a B.C. government official said Wednesday.

The invitation was sent by Health Minister Dennis Cocke to Yao Kuang, Chinese ambassador to Canada. It asked China to send one or two doctors trained in acupuncture to work for several months at Vancouver General Hospital.

Clayton Perry, Cocke's executive assistant, said the Chinese refused because they are concerned that many North Americans have "fantastic expectations on acupuncture."

Foreman Wins Fantastic Prize

LONDON (AP) — James Wood, a 56-year-old building foreman, won more than $1.3 million on the soccer pool Wednesday — the biggest sum ever won by one man.

He immediately thought of his hobby, fishing.

"I shall buy my own private stretch of river, somewhere where there is plenty of salmon," he said as he arrived in London to receive his cheque.

The actual prize was £542,252 or $1,328,517. Wood filled up a row of entries costing a total of one pound or $2.40.

He got the fantastic prize to himself because he was the only one among millions of bettors who picked up eight games ending in draws in British soccer last Saturday.

Officials of the Pools firm — Littlewoods — couldn't believe at first that only one man had won. Usually a big prize is shared among several. The previous record for one man was £512,000 or $1,228,800.

On Bilingualism

By RICHARD JACKSON
Colonist Bureau

OTTAWA — Prime Minister Trudeau promises to make it difficult for some members of the opposition when the government brings a hard and clear-cut resolution on bilingualism before the Commons.

With his resolution, he said Wednesday in an interview taped with Montreal newspaperwoman Solange Chaput-Rolland, he will compel all members of Parliament, but especially those of the opposition — to take a firm, unequivocal stand on the issue.

In this way, he went on, he will make it impossible for some opposition members again to go before the electorate — presumably at the next election — to take "ambiguous" positions on bilingualism.

He accused these unidentified members of the opposition of having said they opposed only the "excesses," as they termed them, of bilingualism, and not the question of the two official languages itself.

But, he charged, it was bilingualism alone that they really opposed.

They would have to take a clear position — for or against bilingualism in such a way that there could be no room later to manoeuvre around it with qualifying "ifs" and "buts".

Then the prime minister made a second disclosure.

Among the reasons he had decided to remain as prime minister — and he specified only this one — had been to be in a position to pursue and clarify the bilingual issue.

This was the first word, at least from the prime minister himself, that he ever had any other intention than doing what he could to remain in power.

In the throne speech, the government spoke of a resolution on bilingualism, together with guidelines, that would be coming before the House this session.

But the throne speech gave no hint that it would be such a "hard" resolution, compelling all MPs to stand up and be counted in such a way as to preclude any future running for cover behind qualifications.
